

'Protest' Rocks Guards

By RICHARD JACKSON
Colonist Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — How far can student "protest" go?

Right into the very heart of the establishment? Into the Canadian Guards? Into the show-window ceremonial of the department of national defence, the changing of the guard on Parliament Hill?

Better believe it, for sad to say, it's happened.

The Guards, three platoons of red-jacketed, bearskin-hatted officers and men and a 60-piece regimental band, perform the colorful changing ceremony every summer morning at 10 o'clock before a gallery of tourists, mostly Americans, from the last week in June through the first week of September.

But with integration, unification and the "jolly green jumper" of a tri-service uniform, but most of all because of defence cut-backs, the Guards last winter came on hard times.

They have a date with the executioner, and while the regiment which has served in Cyprus awaits its extinction, manpower runs thin.

To fill the gaps in the ranks, students from Ottawa universities and Montreal colleges and high schools were enlisted.

For them it was a summer job, strictly.

They'd parade to Parliament Hill for the Guard changing, and for this they'd get $375 plus room and board. They'd work a schedule of eight days "on" and three and a half days "off."

Two of every three Guardsmen were students.

And then it happened.

A hard-core few, less than a dozen, couldn't hack the discipline.

These were student activists from Montreal's high schools and the riot-ripped Sir George Williams University.

Bearskins—No Plumes

But it was rather a "chicken-type" protest.

They didn't wear the feathered plumes on the big black bearskins.

Now they're being formally "put on charge" and will get a real taste of discipline.

The "protest" began three days ago, going undetected until Monday.

But it sure has shaken defence headquarters and the once-proud Guards.

"We treated them like men, like soldiers," says Captain F. S. Gagnon who was in command while Col. Weinert was on special duty at Camp Petawawa, the Guards' home base.

"That's where we made our mistake," lamented the captain. "They aren't men, not even young men. They're immature kids. They joined us to do a reasonably well-paid job and we expected them to perform as honorably and well as the others who have been absolutely first class."

The absence of plumes on the bearskins not only was known but understood for the very reason that the clasp temporarily were out of unit stock.

So none of the officers counted unplumed bearskins.

Not, that is, until Monday morning, when as the Guards marched onto the Hill they were asked about the "protest."

'Mutiny' Confirmed

They were unbelieving. It couldn't have happened, they insisted. Never in the Guards. But they would check.

They did. And to their horror they confirmed it was mutiny.

Now everyone in the national capital's enormous military establishment is bravely trying to laugh it off, but it hurts.

Chuckling, one officer tried brushing the whole thing off with the remark it was little more than "a schoolboy storm in a teacup."

But it's not all that funny.

For the defence department was giving these students good solid military training which would make them eligible, when they get their university degrees, for commissioning as officers.

Now it's just another dream. What bothers the national capital is that the "mutiny" could mean the end of this finest of summer festivals, the changing of the Guard which has been drawing an annual average 750,000 tourists to Parliament Hill since former Conservative defence minister George Peckford initially presented the half-hour daily military pageant back in 1957.

Sad to think that student "protest" may have put it in peril — and that next summer Parliament Hill won't be hearing 50 of the nation's finest handmen sounding those slow and gutsy British army marches. Thin Red Line. Standard of Saint George. Voice of the Guns and other great "tunes of glory."

Boards Yacht with Pretty Brunette

Trudeau Cruising Mediterranean

MENTON, France (UPI) — Canadian Prime minister Trudeau slipped unobtrusively into France Tuesday morning, flew to the glamorous Riviera, and immediately boarded a yacht in the company of an unidentified pretty brunette for a Mediterranean cruise.

With the help of French security officials, Trudeau eluded newsmen and press photographers who tried to keep up with his whirlwind passage from Paris to Nice and finally to this tiny port near the French-Italian border.

Police but firm security agents even prevented the deputy mayor of Menton from boarding the yacht Adanae when he tried to present the vacationing Canadian leader a traditional Riviera welcoming gift of flowers and brandy-soaked fruit.

He told the deputy mayor he would like to visit Menton again, especially the town hall decorated by Jean Cocteau. The yacht, which was flying a Panamanian flag, is registered in the name of Mrs. Lucienne Wilson, a wealthy 69-year-old Canadian woman who lives in nearby Monte Carlo. When telephoned, Mrs. Wilson refused to answer any questions, saying "I don't have to make any statements."

The boat started sailing to the east, presumably to Italy after noon local time. An Italian secret service

PRAGUE (AP) — Without waiting for demonstrations, riot troops tear gassed and clubbed downtown crowds here Tuesday night on the anniversary eve of the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Hours earlier, Communist party chief Gustav Husak endorsed the Aug. 20-21, 1968, invasion and warned against anniversary agitation.

More than a dozen armored personnel carriers and water cannon rolled into Wenceslas

Grounds Lacking In Attack

Square as evening rush-hour crowds lined the sidewalks starting sullenly at the national Museum and the statue of St. Wenceslas; symbols of protest in the last year against Soviet occupation.

After warning the crowd several times to go home, riot police attacked with truncheons. During twilight and after dark they fired three barrages of tear-gas canisters into the square.

Clouds of tear gas sent hundreds of Czechoslovaks and tourists racing in near panic away from the square.

Police and the Czechoslovak army sent guard units to Prague's government buildings, radio stations and newspaper offices.

Husak said earlier in the day in a televised speech to party workers in Prague that "there will be no Wild West in our country."

"They tried to have one for a year and a half and now, once and for all, they must take into account that we will not permit anyone to disrupt the state."

But he admitted that "sabotage-character actions in industry, transport and supply" are taking place.

The incident in Wenceslas Square began in early afternoon when police, reinforced for the anniversary period, cleared a smaller crowd from St. Wenceslas Statue, symbol of anti-Soviet resistance.

Some people in the crowd had been placing flowers at the statue's base. After he took over from Dubcek last April, Husak banned the practice of crowds gathering at the statue.

Wrong Man Serves Five-Day Jail Term

TORONTO (CP) — A Windsor man who cannot drive and has never owned a car spent five days in Don Jail on a charge of non-payment of a parking ticket.

He was jailed because his name was John Bennett, the same name as a person wanted since 1968 for not paying "the parking ticket."

Police Chief James Mackey admitted the mistake Tuesday.

"It appears that the police erred and jailed the wrong man," he said.

John Bennett of Windsor was arrested and charged with being a drunk July 31 when he arrived at Toronto by train.

After receiving a suspended sentence police sent him to Don Jail, claiming they had a warrant from 1968 ordering him to jail for five days for failing to pay a traffic fine.

The Roman Catholic-dominated Irish Republic to the south has favored an end to the 1920 partition that separated it from the Protestant North under British rule. Chester-Clark blamed much of the trouble of the last week on agitation for an end to partition.

Wilson said the civil rights reforms demanded by the Roman Catholic minority in Ulster in jobs, housing and voting rights will be speeded up.

EQUALITY PROMISED

All citizens of Northern Ireland, he said, "irrespective of their political or religious views will have the same rights of freedom against discrimination as all other citizens of the United Kingdom."

Wilson also announced: "We have reached agreement on the main principles and on a declaration which will govern the relations between the two governments and our handling of the problem in the coming months."

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Wilson announced Thursday night that the British military commander in Northern Ireland will take control of all security forces there including Ulster's controversial B-Special police.

Wilson made the announcement in a television broadcast before returning to 10 Downing Street to wind up more than five hours of talks with the Ulster premier, Maj. James Chichester-Clark.

The British leader said the two sides had agreed on a joint declaration which lays the basis for the whole future relationship between the two governments and guarantees progress in resolving North Ireland's civil rights questions that exploded into religious rioting last week.

Forces 'Tight Squeeze'

OTTAWA (CP) — Gen. Jean Victor Allard, retiring chief of the defence staff, says Canada will find it a tight squeeze to fill its foreign and domestic military commitments with armed forces strength of 80,000 or so.

In an interview Tuesday, the plain-spoken general said he understands the need for government-imposed restraint on defence expenditures.

On another point, he said it is "sheer hypocrisy" to advocate that Canada should get out of its present nuclear role while accepting the protection afforded by the West's nuclear deterrent.

He stressed that this is a personal opinion.

FULL RESPONSIBILITY

"The most important thing is that the GOC (General Officer Commanding) commanding British troops will now take over full responsibility for security in Northern Ireland," he said.

"He will have responsibility for the operation of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, including the special constabulary (B-Specials)."

SPECIALS BLAMED

The Roman Catholic minority in Ulster calls the Protestant-based B-Specials trigger-happy and blames them for much of the violence in last week's rioting, including machine-gun barrages on Roman Catholic homes.

Roman Catholics in Ulster and the independent Irish Republic to the south have demanded that the B-Specials, a part-time police force of 8,000 men, be disbanded. But the Ulster government refused.

Wilson stressed that "the question of partition is not involved."

END SOUGHT

The Roman Catholic-dominated Irish Republic to the south has favored an end to the 1920 partition that separated it from the Protestant North under British rule. Chester-Clark blamed much of the trouble of the last week on agitation for an end to partition.

Wilson said the civil rights reforms demanded by the Roman Catholic minority in Ulster in jobs, housing and voting rights will be speeded up.

Giant-Killing Job Faces Two in Esquimalt

By CLEMENT CHAPPLER

Two of the three men hoping to take Esquimalt constituency in the Aug. 27 election will have to be giant killers to succeed.

The two would-be giant-killers are NDPer Jim Gorst, who a year and a half ago was Esquimalt Liberal Association president, and Liberal Fred Phillips, a Langford resident of one and a half years, manager of the CFB Esquimalt Savings Credit Union.

The third man, Social Crediter Herbert Bruch, is the giant. Mr. Bruch is fighting his sixth election in Esquimalt and according to the long-term figures, his popularity is increasing.

Mr. Bruch's lowest point in popularity came in 1960 when he won only 40 per cent of the votes, yet still beat the closest man to him (CCFer Geoff Mitchell) by a comfortable 1,046 votes.

In 1963 he increased his percentage to 48 and in 1966 he walked away with 53 per cent.

One of Mr. Bruch's recurring election planks is that, if elected, he will be a full-time member of the B.C. Legislature. Except for one six-month period in the early 1950s, he has had no job outside that provided by his legislative duties, he says.

He has, however, been national president of the Social Credit party for a number of years, and spends much of his time doing work for the Social Credit "team" all over B.C.

Although he speaks in terms of the province when he says the government party is being "threatened" at this election, he voices no fear for his own riding.

Although he dislikes the term "party organizer," his party work is generally conceded to stand him in good stead when it comes to election time. He calls his campaign "low-key," says the 1966 campaign cost only $720, and that this one will cost about the same.

Personally, he is working no harder in this than in any other campaign, but he says there are more volunteers and offers of help than last time. "I've tried to avoid a machine or organization," Mr. Bruch says.

James Gorst, a former taxi driver who now owns half a cab firm, seems to want to beat Mr. Bruch at his own game by promising to be a full-time parliamentarian. He has switched party lines while trying. He was for a brief period the Liberal candidate

GORDIE HUNTER Spare Me

AT THE RISK of offending the tender sensibilities of some of our pampered athletes, I offer an observation or two gleaned from a rather long association with this strata of our society.

I made passing mention last week of the fact I felt the money paid certain men for playing games was not only out of proportion to their value, but damned well ridiculous. I could have gone a step further by suggesting the adulation showered on them is even more ridiculous. Somebody once said it was time we started paying bonuses to young men who can think hard rather than to those who can throw hard. An amen to that.

SOME of the fellows who perform noble athletic or sporting deeds have become terminal cases of that old malady, swelled head. They are under the impression the sun rises and sets on them and that they can carry on in any boorish manner they please.

Last week we had in our midst the touring professional golfer, a pretty affable lot on the whole. Most of them possess undeniable genius in the art of banging that little white ball into the hole and while there are many who insist golf is not an athletic game, it must be agreed the game calls for well-honed skills and very steady nerves.

There are, however, certain men among them who consistently fail to pass the test of good manners. Moe Norman, one of the better practitioners of the art of golf, one of the more colorful performers, one of the most successful in taking home good sums of money, is a case in point.

MR. NORMAN did his best to insult many spectators during the four days at Uplands. There is a certain point where color leaves off and boorishness sets in. Norman crossed that line on several occasions with ill-mannered remarks to spectators, many of whom were attempting to compliment his playing ability and who received rude returns for their efforts.

His behavior finally resulted in a large portion of the gallery actively honing he would miss the hole and fill on his unthinking head. He also displayed bad manners to his playing companions by showing up late for a teeoff time and by keeping them waiting at another hole while he slaked his thirst with a soft drink.

To be fair about it, most of those participating were absolutely flawless in their deportment. This most certainly holds true for winner Bill Wakeham, who took the good with the bad throughout the week without any display of rancor to the crowd or any sour grapes complaining about the course.

I AM constantly amazed at the number of so-called super athletes who thumb their noses at the public, who feel their off-field deportment is not the public's business. It's hard to imagine their reasoning because without that public, many of them would be excavating ditches at two bucks an hour.

They have a definite responsibility to the public, especially to the younger public. Impressionable youngsters are every move of their athletic heroes and if they read where Joe Namath is consorting with the Cosa Nostra in his New York bar, they grab the idea it can't be had if a football hero like Joe can get away with it.

IT IS UNFAIR to saddle the actual athlete with all the blame for his actions. Any time a young man can pick up half a million bucks for signing his name to a contract, his mind can't help but be turned by such unreal sums of money. Maybe that's why the Gordie Howes and Bobby Hulls are still down-to-earth decent people. They received relatively little in their first few years of hockey. They had to build up to the big money and somewhere along the line they managed to pick up a sense of proportion.

But spare me the hot dog, the big timer. They add nothing to the world of sport.

NEWS NOTE tells us Pierre Elliot has hied himself off to the Mediterranean for a holiday, which must be nice, but it isn't saying much for our own tourist industry is it? And who could help but chuckle at the big corn roast put on by the local Liberals out at Elk Lake last night. Corn roast — would you say that was appropriate?

officer went aboard the yacht for this part of the trip.

There were unconfirmed reports that the Trudeau party was headed for the islands of Greece. No one aboard the yacht would disclose the duration or destination of the voyage, but sources in Menton said the vessel carried provisions for a 10 to 15 day cruise.

Witnesses at the port said that Trudeau got aboard Adanac in the company of a man believed to be his secretary, a French security agent, and a "very pretty young lady" with brown hair who appeared to be in her early 20s.

There was no hint or clue as to her identity.

French reporters on the Riviera, who know most French celebrities by sight, were unable to recognize the girl.

Air Canada officials in Paris were the first to confirm reports that Trudeau had arrived in France aboard one of their regularly scheduled flights from Canada at 7:15 a.m. Paris time.

An hour later, Trudeau was aboard an Air France flight to Nice, where he was met by an automobile sent by the Canadian embassy.

Several newsmen were at Nice airport when Trudeau arrived, but the were kept away from the Canadian prime minister by Nice airport police.

From the airport Trudeau was driven through the city to Nice, the capital of the Riviera, along 12.5 miles of coastal highway to Menton, where he promptly boarded the yacht.

From Page 1

"True Liberals have been pushed aside by people who pose as Liberals," Mr. Gorst said at the time of his Liberal demise. Less than a year later he told his NDP nominators that former federal finance minister Walter Gordon once told him the NDP was the party of the future.

Mr. Gorst's campaign manager is Geoff Mitchell (twice defeated by Mr. Bruch) who sometimes still refers to his party as the CCF. The standard high-pitched canvassing machine that typifies NDP-strong, Sacred-held ridings like Saanich-Islands is lacking in Esquimalt.

Mr. Gorst's headquarters look lonely on the Old Island Highway but he notes that 25,000 cars drive by each day.

His strongest campaign gambit so far seems to be the fight for poster supremacy, at which he at least equals Mr. Bruch. In accordance with normal NDP policy, his signs adorn trees, poles and right-of-ways all the way to Jordan River.

If the saying, "posters don't vote" is wrong, Mr. Gorst should give Mr. Bruch a run for his money.

What gives Mr. Gorst one advantage over Liberal candidate Fred Phillips is the familiarity of the name in the political arena. It is less likely that Mr. Gorst's alleged claim on the services vote (one estimate puts it at 4,000) because of his former Liberal attachment will help him. Mr. Phillips' guess is that his work in the CFB Esquimalt Credit Union, plus the fact that he is a former serviceman himself and sees their problems with a sympathetic eye, will give him that edge. Besides, he, not Mr. Gorst, is the Liberal candidate.

His work in the credit union, Mr. Phillips says, gives him first-hand and first-name knowledge of about 2,500 people in the Esquimalt area, and this is one of the things that prompted him to enter active politics.

Admitting he is a novice, he is "quietly confident" that polling day will be a surprise to his opponents, neither of whom he had met with only nine days left in the campaign.

Mr. Phillips, like Mr. Gorst, is banking partly on the alleged absence of Mr. Bruch from the riding and peoples' complaints. A random check of 25 people, he said, proved only five had heard of Mr. Bruch.

This probably would not surprise Mr. Bruch, who also regards indifferently the fact that Esquimalt riding's voter registration jumped by more than 6,000 since the last election. Esquimalt has always been characterized by a transient and growing population, he says, and this hasn't hurt him yet.

Like Sacred-held Saanich-Islands, Esquimalt ranges from urban apartments to farm, rural and out-of-the-way coastal — an indeterminate, soup-to-nuts collection of voters that are unlikely to have one collective beef to upset the established voting pattern.

Education isn't just the three R's. It's the development of a child to his or her full potential. For this to happen the mind must be challenged, experienced, nurtured — and the body encouraged to grow healthy. To achieve this the educational system must be a place of learning. From your school home a generalist (playing ball) must be an expert (teacher). It is a matter of the good old-fashioned French phrase: la main à la roue. The B.C. ## Your Good Health

Hereditary 'Fish Skin' Due to Oil Shortage

By G. T. THOSTESON, M.D.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Can you give me some information on ichthyosis, a severe scaling of the skin? I have five children. My father had this condition, two of my boys have it.

My two daughters are near marrying age and I feel they should be told of this in case they should want to decide not to have children. What are the chances of its showing up again?—MRS. D.B.

Ichthyosis (also known as fish skin disease or xeroderma) is a defect in the oil glands of the skin. The result is a dry, scaly skin which gives it the "fish skin" name.

It is a hereditary condition which runs in families, and it seems (as in your case) to affect boys more often than girls—but it does appear in girls. Not, I gather, in yours. I cannot answer your question about the risk of its appearing in the next generation. I do not know that anyone as yet has sufficient information to make a prediction in such cases.

However, and this may be of some comfort, it is not as rare as is believed by those who have severe cases. In milder forms, ichthyosis is common, appearing on arms and legs as an excessively dry skin with tiny flakes. Only the severe, and hence more noticeable cases, which are relatively rare, attract attention.

Since the condition stems from lack of sufficient oil in the skin, treatment involves preventing less of such oil as there is.

Bland, oily skin lotions or cocoa butter are used to soften the skin. Your physician might or might not elect to add a bit of salicylic acid to an ointment if scaling is severe.

Since the skin condition is worse in winter and slightly better in summer, cautious use of a sun lamp may be helpful.

There are different varieties of the ailment, which may or may not account for the fact that thyroid medication sometimes helps.

Dear Dr. Thosteson: Alan could sore eyes be caused by shingles?—Mrs. M.W.

Shingles, which is a virus infection of a nerve, most commonly attacks around the ribs, but it can attack a nerve somewhere else—including the supraorbital nerves or those emerging over the eyeballs. In that case, shingles can cause both pain and visual problems.

UN Council Meets Today

UNITED NATIONS (Reuters) — The Security Council has agreed to meet at 7:30 a.m. P.M.T. today to discuss a request from the Irish Republic that the world body authorize the dispatch of a UN peace-keeping force to riot-torn Northern Ireland.

Spanish ambassador Jaime de Pinies, president of the council this month, made the announcement Tuesday after day-long consultations with members of the 15-nation council.

Britain opposes UN involvement in the dispute.

Counterfeit Revolt Plotted?

NEW YORK (UPI) — Hard-line Moscow Communists are seeking to stage a phony revolt in Prague during the first anniversary of the Czechoslovak invasion to give them the excuse to topple the moderate government of Gustav Husak, the New York Daily News said today.

The news said U.S. officials have been told of the scheme, code-named "Milan," by reliable European diplomatic sources.

"The hard-line plotters expect to install Alois Indra, longtime close friend of Russia, as first secretary of the Czech Communist party and new strong man of the solidly-pro Moscow government," the News said. "The new government is to be created and put into office on Friday, and the final crackdown on liberalism is slated to begin." The News said Husak is to be "kicked upstairs as chairman or president." It said the key figure involved in the plot was Vasil Bilak, party secretary for interparty affairs.

Bombers Rake Canal

From UPI Israel jet fighter-bombers Tuesday streaked across the Suez Canal ceasefire line and attacked Egyptian artillery positions which had pounded Israeli troops and installations on the occupied east bank of the waterway for hours. Egypt said it shot down three Israeli warplanes. Israel admitted losing one. Israel said the downed plane's pilot was seen parachuting into Egyptian territory. All other planes which took part in the 20-minute attack on the Egyptian positions near the southern end of the canal returned safely, it said. The Egyptians said Israeli French-built Mirage jets staged three separate raids and lost three planes to anti-aircraft gunners. The spokesman in Cairo said three Egyptian soldiers were wounded in the Israeli raids.

Korean Talks Thursday

SEOUL (UPI) — South Korean newspapers reported Tuesday U.S. and North Korean military officers will meet Thursday to discuss the fate of a U.S. helicopter shot down in North Korea. The newspapers said the UN command accepted a North Korean counter-proposal for a meeting of the Korean armistice commission Thursday at Panmunjom after the UN had originally proposed a Tuesday meeting. The helicopter, with three men aboard, was shot down Sunday after it strayed into communist territory while on a training flight south of the demarcation line separating North and South Korea.

U.S. Probe Begun

Tank Kills Nine of Own

SAIGON (UPI) — Nine GIs were killed and five wounded Tuesday when a U.S. tank crew accidentally fired a shell into its own troops during a Communist attack on an outpost north of Saigon. Military spokesmen said the mishap occurred at a U.S. 1st Air Cavalry division artillery base near Quan Loi, 60 miles north of the capital. The incident was under investigation.

Four American crewmen and Associated Press combat photographer Oliver Noonan, 29, of Norwood, Mass., apparently were killed Tuesday when a U.S. Army UH1 helicopter was hit by ground fire and exploded in flight on the northern coast. Meanwhile, hundreds of American reinforcements poured into a battle near Da Nang Tuesday to relieve two U.S. infantry companies badly battered in the biggest ground fighting in northern Vietnam since the Communist command launched a fall campaign last week.

Police Plane Kills Seven

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — A light police plane skidded off a runway in the small town of Asferayen, killing seven children who had gathered to watch the takeoff. Four other children as well as the pilot and two occupants of the plane were badly injured.

The two units ran into an estimated 1,200 North Vietnamese infantrymen Sunday while sweeping the foothills 30 miles south of Da Nang. Fighting raged through Tuesday and the two U.S. companies suffered casualties of about 40 per cent. In Bangkok, Foreign Minister Thanat Khuman said Tuesday the Thai government had pledged to President Nixon during his insurgent war in that country. Thanat, speaking to a foreign correspondents' dinner, said he would not ask for such assistance even if Thailand were threatened with a covert invasion of the kind North Vietnam is carrying out against South Vietnam. recent visit there that Thailand would never ask for U.S. combat troops to fight an ## Green Berets Cleared At Hearing Today?

By NAT GIBSON

SAIGON (UPI) — Two agents of the CIA will testify today when an army panel resumes an investigation of eight green beret special forces members suspected of murder, sources close to the case said Tuesday.

Two civilian attorneys, representing four of the special forces officers involved, said they expected the army to drop all allegations and dismiss the case after today's hearing.

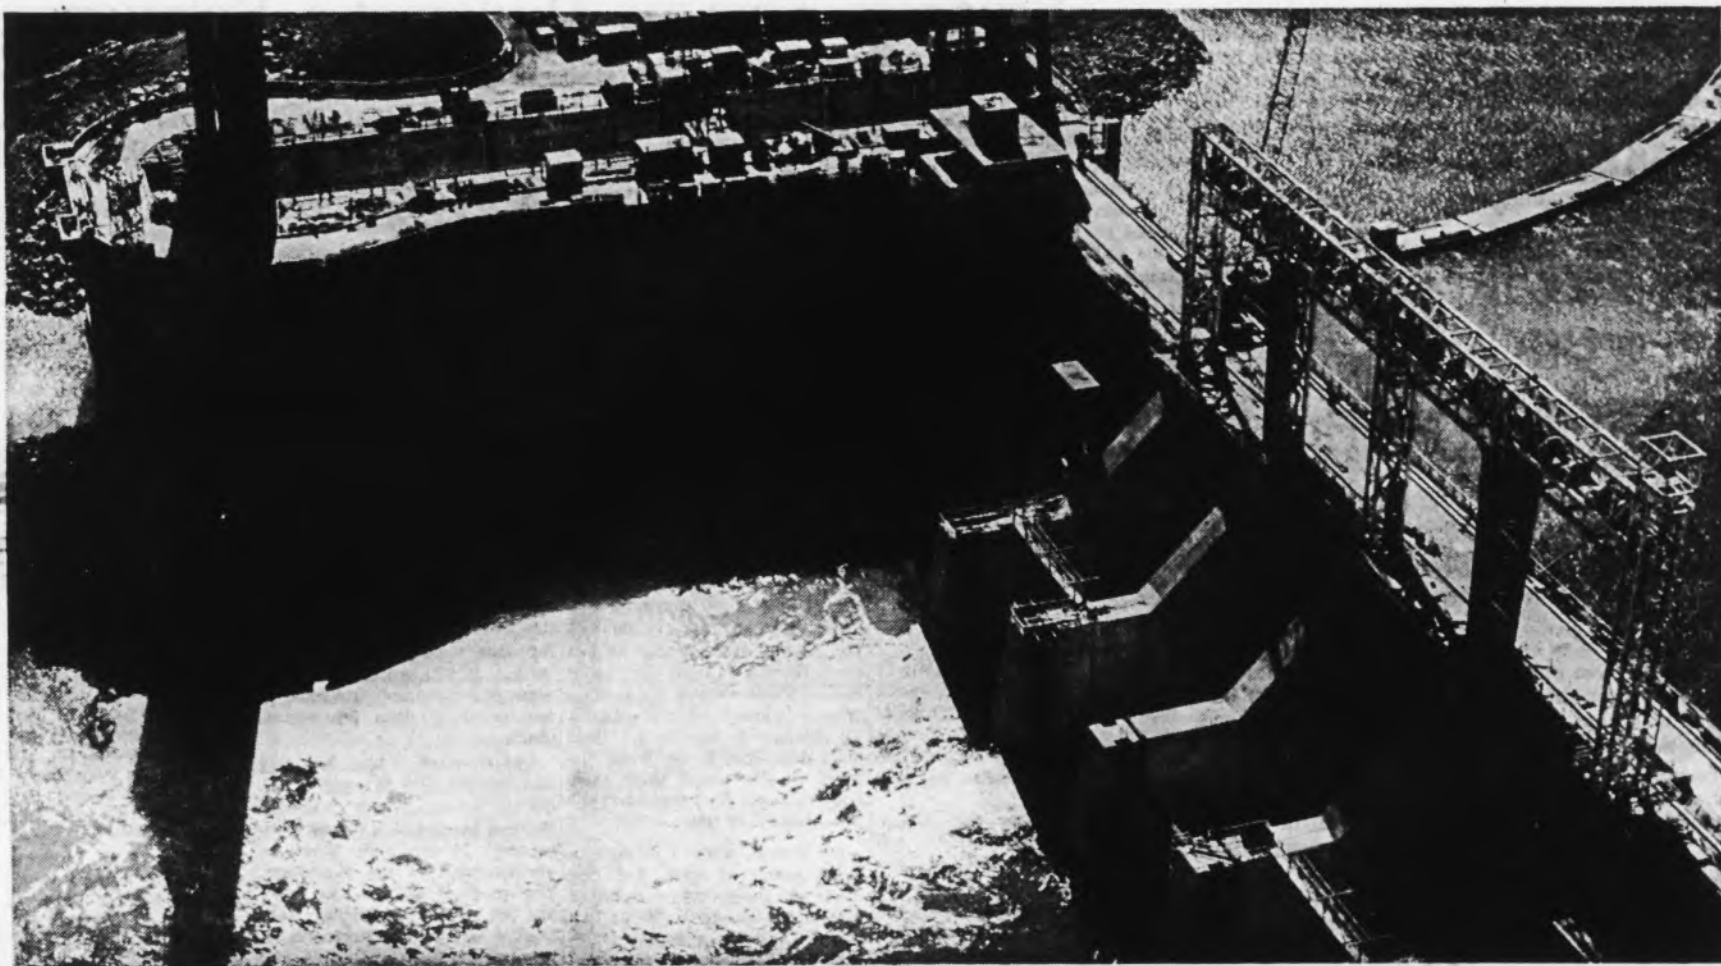

The CIA has so far declined to allow its agents to sign any formal statements on the case, sources said, and also has withheld its files on the case from investigators.

Sources said the CIA files include the records of the victim, a South Vietnamese said to have been a double agent employed by the CIA and working for the North Vietnamese army.

A Saigon newspaper, Thoi, added its support Tuesday to earlier reports that the victim was a man known as Thai Khac. The earlier reports said his full name was Chu Yen Thai Khac, but Thoi identified him as Thai Khac Chuyen, 31, of Saigon.

In Washington, the U.S. army said the eight suspects were arrested and charged with murder without any advance notification to the Pentagon.

Productive Project

BACK IN MARCH it was noted in connection with Victoria's proposed harborfront redevelopment that counting chickens unhatched wasn't the preferred way—but that it was a pleasantly hopeful occupation at City Hall. Now the hatching is thrown into doubt. The minister without portfolio in charge of the federal government's housing policy, Robert Andras, has announced that apart from a dozen or so urban renewal projects now under consideration, Ottawa is clamping down on its spending in this field pending a policy study that may take a year.

The pleasantness of the economic counting in Victoria's case, however, and the fact that as Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell says the planned redevelopment is not of the sweep-clear, bulldozer type which has come into federal disfavor, ought still to persuade Mr. Andras that this is not a project to cast aside.

Here is an instance where public spending would definitely be productive, according to all indications. The plan to rehabilitate the Wharf Street waterfront area would require a comparatively small public investment for a large return.

The Vancouver firm of Acres Western Ltd. estimated after a seven-month study that for a civic expenditure of slightly less than $2,500,000, including interest, private enterprise would be encouraged to spend $26,500,000 on new construction and rehabilitation to complete the renewal, hopefully by 1981, and the city would then be receiving an extra $488,000 a year in tax and trade-licence revenues. Additionally, the benefits of revitalization and of an increased downtown population would spread throughout the business district.

The first private-enterprise project definitely proposed for the area, however, involved very nearly the total private expenditure envisioned in the Acres feasibility study. The Reid Properties plan for a complex of hotel, residential, commercial and entertainment accommodations alone called for an investment of $25,000,000, with the virtual certainty that this program would provide added incentive for other private development and redevelopment in the vicinity.

Mayor Hugh Stephen has excellent grounds, therefore, to continue to press for federal aid for the project.

Still the Patriot

A YEAR AGO, at the instigation of the Soviet Union and with varying degrees of enthusiasm, troops and tanks of the Warsaw Pact nations invaded the territory of Czechoslovakia—a friend and ally whose tendency towards liberal reform worried the Kremlin leaders.

The pretext was the fear of a pro-West type of revolution, of anarchy inspired by anti-Communist neighbors, and an alleged invitation to the Soviet bloc to intervene. It was built on a foundation of falsehood, as subsequent events have proved.

The real fear, indicated but never admitted by the Kremlin, was that any departure from the orthodox line would tend to loosen Moscow's control in the satellite territories and encourage the freedoms which are represented by the democratic ideology.

The event gave rise to that extraordinary statement of Soviet policy, defending the restriction of sovereignty of nations which it chooses to call its allies.

Today new tensions grip Czechoslovakia. The People's Militia is alerted for any possible demonstrations, and regular army troops have joined civil forces in patrolling against anti-Soviet disturbances.

The government obviously is apprehensive that the temper of the people is still explosive. But how much of this unrest and unhappiness is directly due to the invasion and continuing occupation by Czechoslovakia's Communist neighbors it is impossible to say. Some of it, certainly. Repression inevitably compresses the forces of resistance, whatever form they take.

Meanwhile, in Prague, Dr. Gustav Husak, the Communist Party leader who supplanted the liberal-minded Alexander Dubcek, has blamed his predecessor for disregarding the warnings which preceded the occupation of last August. Had he heeded them, says Dr. Husak, the invasion would have been prevented.

That is highly problematical, and at any rate at this stage and with the country on the verge of another crisis, this sort of recrimination is not likely to have the effect of appeasing anybody.

Mr. Dubcek, on the other hand, still plays the part of the patriot. He has pleaded with his countrymen to keep calm.

"It would be tragic and sad," he said, "if people in some places were to let themselves be incited to demonstrations and vandalism" during the black anniversary, as it has been called.

It would, indeed. It would further smother what little freedom is left in the land, support the Soviet contention that dangerous elements are still active, and help the Kremlin justify the occupation.

Czechoslovakians and everyone else who is devoted to the cause of freedom should remember, however, that submissiveness does not necessarily mean surrender.

Consumer's Friend

IT IS INTERESTING, if nothing more, to note the Economic Council of Canada's recommendation for "enforcement of tough price-fixing legislation" in the hands of an independent tribunal to improve "the consumer's bargaining position in the market place."

Inquiry at five international airlines discloses the around-the-world fare in each was identical, the Toronto Globe and Mail reports. Air Canada was one of them.

"Uh, d'you think we'd better say please . . . ?"

Canada and China

Progress Toward Diplomatic Relations

By FREDERICK NOSRAI from Hong Kong

CHINA has indicated that it wants to establish diplomatic relations with Canada by its remarkable silence on Canadian affairs.

Canada is one of the few important Western nations that does not come under attack in the Chinese press. And this is most significant.

For it means the Peking regime has told its editors that Sino-Canadian relations have reached a very delicate stage, and that nothing must be done to annoy or offend the Canadian government.

Peking's press and radio are most reliable barometers in regard to Chinese foreign policy.

The fact that Canada simply is not mentioned in Chinese newspapers these days can be interpreted as a positive sign.

Mitchell Sharp hinted that China may be exerting some pressure over Formosa when he said that Canada does not expect China to endorse its territorial claims. This may mean Peking has been trying in vain to extract from the Trudeau government an assurance that Canada recognizes China's sovereignty over Formosa.

Although Ottawa simply will not be bullied by the Chinese into any such declaration, the talks nevertheless will proceed in a slow, orderly fashion.

And with China attempting to realign its foreign policy to meet the dangers of ever-worsening Sino-Soviet relations, an exchange of ambassadors can be expected by next year or by 1971 at the latest.

Body-Clock Demands

Jet Age Syndrome

From The Montreal Star

WITHIN a few hours on Sunday afternoon 1,200 people landed at Montreal airport from Europe—tired out. About half of them showed up at their offices Monday after a wonderful European holiday. Tired out. And they'll be tired for most of the week, until their body clocks are regulated by the passage of time.

As if that weren't enough, a great many of them had just about got over another battle of the time change. They had boarded the epic-and-span jet on a recent Saturday evening and seven or eight hours later departed in London for Paris or Frankfurt. It was the middle of night by Montreal and body time. Their systems screamed for more rest than nervous catnaps during the flight provided. But not a minute was to be spared of that precious holiday time.

The jet age syndrome is, at least superficially, hardest on determined holidayers who fly blithely off, ignorant of or ignoring, the problems of bodily adjustment which experienced travellers understand and treat respectfully. Flight personnel, for instance, habitually operate on home-town time, wherever they are. Air line people on specific assignments, write off the day of arrival whenever a four-hour time jump is involved.

Within ICAO, a Montreal-Karachi flight means provision of two or three days for adjustment. Unfortunately, big business and government agencies frequently try to operate as though those entrusted with major commercial or political decisions are immune to the syndrome. The medical fact is that they are not. Lower efficiency, subjective fatigue and hormone irregularities have all been noted in research following Atlantic flights in either direction. From the medical point of view, the high-priced negotiator who takes the night flight to Paris is just not fit to make what might be vital decisions on the day of his arrival.

With ship travel it was different. Through an Atlantic crossing the clock never advanced or slowed by more than one hour per day, and the bodily system never noticed the difference. What is happening daily in the jet age to thousands does not mean that long distance flying is absurd. It does mean that travellers are absurd when they try to ignore the immutable demands of their own systems.

Today in History

By The Canadian Press

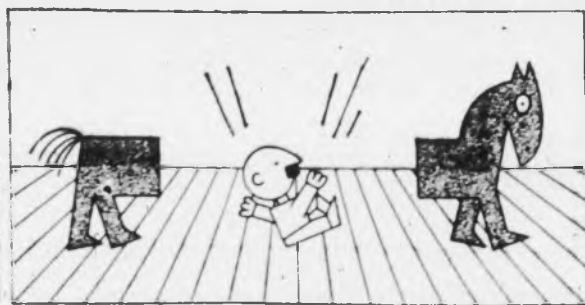

Gen. William Booth, founder of the Salvation Army, died 57 years ago today—in 1912—after a lifetime of Christian work among the poorest and most degraded people in Britain. Gen. Booth and his helpers worked to bring Christianity into places where the regular churches could scarcely touch. The "Army" in spite of opposition to its beginnings later met with sustained success, and spread throughout the world. 1914—German troops entered Brussels during the First World War. 1932—The Imperial Economic Conference ended in Ottawa. Second World War: Twenty-five years ago today—in 1944—Allied troops closed the German escape corridor in the Normandy pocket south of Falaise; street fighting between patriots and Germans was reported in Paris. Marshal Henri Petain was arrested by the Gestapo and taken to Belfort near the Swiss frontier.

Pollution Dangers In American West

By MARQUIS CHILDS from Denver

IN the interesting museum of the Colorado Historical Society is the scalp of a young woman taken from a Sioux Indian captured by the Federals after a successful raid by the Sioux on a frontier outpost. A long braid of fading brown hair is attached to a withered piece of scalp.

They lived dangerously in those pioneer times a century or more ago. For all the sleek, glistening new office buildings rising in booming Denver, you can hear concerned citizens who believe the danger today is infinitely greater than the hazards of the trail and the threat of the savages who for some strange reason did not appreciate having their ancient hunting grounds taken over by the "civilizing" whites.

The case they make is that the danger is far more subtle and pervasive. It lies in the industry of mass death that between private enterprise and the military has developed several flourishing centres in this area. First and most conspicuous is the army's Rocky Mountain Arsenal with its huge cache of nerve gas. That reservoir of death, sufficient to kill all the 1,100,000 inhabitants of this metropolis if properly administered, lies within a short distance of the Denver airport.

What would happen should a plane crash on takeoff into that reservoir hardly bears thinking about. But, as more and more people begin to think about it, the army decided something had to be done. Moreover, the metal canisters carried over from the Second World War, each fused for activating the liquid as an aerosol bomb converts liquid into spray, had begun to corrode.

In a moment of sheer lunacy the army decided to dispose of this hazard by transporting it across the country and dumping it into the Atlantic Ocean off the New Jersey coast. The special trains transporting this instant death would have passed through a half-dozen population centres and finally would have traversed Jersey's teeming industrial centres. Any competent actuary could have figured the chances of an accident and they were not small.

As a result of the cries of indignation rising from the route of the proposed nerve gas caravan, the army gave up the idea. Briefly, consideration was given to interring it somewhere in the vicinity of the Dugway Proving Ground in Utah where those 5,000 sheep were killed by a nerve-gas experiment conducted in the open. But the good people of Utah felt they were already subject to enough dangers.

I Beg to Differ . . .

Hope Restored

By FRANK LOWE

FOR those of us who cling to the belief that even in this age of technology there are some things man cannot explain away scientifically, there now is a bit of hope.

A report from Egypt states that attempts to X-ray the Pyramid of Chepren at Gizeh, near Cairo, have failed. The X-rays were taken over a period of a year, and at a cost of more than $1,000,000, to determine if there were any hidden chambers in the 3,000-year-old pyramid.

But, I am pleased to report the most sophisticated equipment failed to perform as it should. This, I say, is good news because during the last few decades science has been taking much of the fun and mystery out of living.

There was a time when our country was full of delightfully scary superstitions and legends. Now, alas, such is not the case. For instance, I remember as a child that on certain nights when the moon was right, I could stand in my back yard and look down the marsh that stretched from our barn to the Cobequid Bay.

And if I was lucky I could see while, misty shapes whirl across the moon-lit marsh, giving me a delicious sense of fear.

Then, around grade eight, some smart aleck physics teacher told me about marsh gases and ruined it all.

There was also the business of fire ships. Any boy growing up on the Atlantic coast knew that on certain occasions old-fashioned sailing ships their rigging in flames, could be seen at various places along the coast. We knew these apparitions existed because our grandfathers had told us they existed. Some grandfathers even talked about seeing these ships.

The Northumberland Strait was a favorite cruising spot for fire ships, it seems, and it was an eerie, but wonderful, experience to stand on a headland on a clear, windy night and watch for them.

At the foot of the headland should be.

Eventually a committee of scientists was named to consider the problem. Headed by Dr. George Kistiakowski who had been President Eisenhower's science adviser, the committee concluded that the gas should be destroyed by a chemical procedure. While this will be a long and difficult process, it will involve, according to the Kistiakowski committee, no contamination of the atmosphere.

An important part in arousing the public to what the perils are in these centres of mass death is the Colorado Committee on Environmental Information. Made up of scientists in the University of Colorado and specialists in research projects financed with federal money, they are insisting on the public's right to know just what the dangers are. The committee, which includes such distinguished scientists as Dr. Edward U. Condon, former head of the National Bureau of Standards, is patterned after a group formed by Prof. Barry Commoner of Washington University that has performed invaluable service in monitoring radioactive fallout and giving the public an opportunity to appraise the consequences of the poison released into the atmosphere.

The Colorado committee is concentrating on what may or may not have happened at the serious fire that swept the Dow Chemical Company plant manufacturing plutonium at Rocky Mountain Flats two months ago. Did the fire release into the immediate environment deadly plutonium, the raw material of nuclear weapons? The company says no and so does the Atomic Energy Commission, the contractor.

But the scientists are not satisfied. A subcommittee headed by Edward Martell, himself at one time part of the Pentagon weapons hierarchy, is demanding answers to a long list of questions. They are demanding, too, a survey of the soil in the environs of the plant that employs 3,000 workers. The crusading weekly, Cerber's Journal, regularly cites the record of the workers pressing claims against Dow not only for accidents in the "hot" areas of the plant but for various forms of cancer and leukemia, alleged to be the result of dealing with the stuff that is the prime agent of annihilation.

The commission named to study chemical and biological warfare would do well to come to Denver. Here, as the distant mountains are shrouded in haze that is part smog from the motor car and part industrial waste, is a case history of what man has done to his environment.

(Copyright 1969, by United Feature Syndicate, Inc.)

Each year, it seemed another cherished myth was shattered. Finally there was nothing that could not be explained away, logically and coldly, by the scientific whiz-kids.

It kind of made for a dull life. But now the Pyramid of Chepren is doing its bit to bring a little fun and mystery back into things.

Dr. Amir Gohed, in charge of the scientific attempt to X-ray the pyramid, says the year-long findings "defy all the known laws of science and electronics."

To show what he meant, he put a tape containing the results of one day's X-ray efforts through a computer, which traced the pattern of cosmic ray particles on paper.

He then selected a recording made the next day and put it through the computer. The recorded pattern was completely different.

When asked by a reporter if all this scientific know-how had been rendered useless by some force beyond man's comprehension, Dr. Gohed replied:

"Either the geometry of the pyramid is in substantial error, or there is a mystery which is beyond explanation—call it what you will, occultism, the curse of the Pharaohs, sorcery or magic, there is some force that defies the laws of science at work in the pyramid."

That's the kind of stuff we like to hear, Dr. Gohed.

We are delighted to know that the legendary curse of the Pharaohs can't be explained away, not even by scientists and a million bucks' worth of scientific equipment.

It helps make the world a little spookier, the way any world should be.

Gaullists, Common Market Partners Incensed by Pompidou's Move

Devaluation of Franc Upsets Everyone

By DON COOK, from Paris

France's abrupt but skilful and well-timed devaluation of the franc a week ago has been like a rock tossed into a quiet pond. After the splash, the ripples continue in wider and wider circles.

The first effects obviously fall on the French economy itself, and President Georges Pompidou's ministers and economic officials are working overtime to prepare austerity measures, budget cuts and control edicts to be put into effect in early September with the aim of ensuring that the advantages gained by devaluation are not dissipated by inflation and price increases.

But that is only the beginning. On the political front Pompidou's devaluation has increased tensions between the new president and the old Gaullists, bitter at the speed and abruptness with which De Gaulle's rigid "defend the franc" policy has been dumped.

Open conflict is also mounting between the government on the one hand and the trade unions and the political left on the other and will sharpen as the fall wage negotiating gets under way.

Meanwhile, the effect of French devaluation on the European Common Market has been pretty shattering. In this matter of over-riding consult the other Common Market partners.

"Two down..."

He has shown, in other words, that Europe is still a long, long way from the unity in which national interests are subordinated to common policies, common action and a common cause.

The biggest Common Market casualty of France's action is the farm program — by which a price structure for the six countries had been constructed and financed out of complex levies and subsidies.

France's devaluation broke the structure by reducing the value of the franc by 12.5 per cent, and it proved impossible to patch up a repair job in Brussels for two reasons. First were the sheer technical complications. But more than that, the political will was gone.

For France, the agricultural policy has been an absolute Common Market priority objective for 10 years.

But when France acted unilaterally in devaluing the franc, the attitude of the other governments was that the French could not play a lone hand on currency rates and expect everybody else to co-operate in picking up the pieces.

So the farm policy was suspended for two years — quite probably forever, at least in the form which existed until last Tuesday morning.

There were signs, in fact, that the policy had become so unwieldy and expensive that the other governments were not totally unhappy at the chance to kill the whole thing.

At the same time, France's reassertion of economic nationalism seems to open fresh diplomatic and negotiating possibilities for the British. The political drive to "get Europe moving again," meaning the problem of British entry into the Common Market, is strong everywhere but Paris, and the post-devaluation developments have certainly contributed.

It remains to be seen, however, how the French will play the hand. One argument runs that because the farm policy is now up in the air, this is just the time to bring Britain into the market on a new ground floor, with the chance to build a new farm policy around British entry.

On the other hand, it is not beyond the wit or capacity of French diplomats to argue the reverse — that the British must be kept waiting while the Six patch a new farm policy together again.

Nobody has followed the French in devaluation. But the end is not in sight and the ripples from the French splash are still being felt.

The pound sterling took another knock of weak trade figures for July right after the French acted, and this does not augur well for monetary stability across the English Channel.

Moreover, the French devaluation leaves the Germans more isolated and under greater pressure than ever. Part of the German argument was "Why should we increase our currency? Let the French devalue."

Now they've done it, and the deutschmark therefore remains even more subject to speculative pressures when the speculators get back from the vacation spots for the September monetary season.

Soviet Union Masses More Than 60 Warships

Med Russian Lake

By K. C. THALER, from London

The Soviet Union has massed more than 60 warships in the Mediterranean in the biggest and most powerful buildup since the Kremlin embarked on the penetration of the strategic Middle East.

Political and defence quarters said they were baffled by what looks like a major demonstration of Soviet naval power in what was once virtually the private preserve of the U.S. 6th Fleet.

Some assessments suggested it may be designed to underline Moscow's backing for the Arab states and to deter Israel from any major military move against Egypt.

The Soviet fleet in the Mediterranean is authoritatively reported to include some of Russia's most powerful units, including the 20,000-ton helicopter-carrying cruiser Moskva, missile-carrying cruisers and destroyers, landing ships and supply vessels and eight submarines, mostly nuclear-powered.

Defence sources said the buildup is still in progress and the fleet is expected to be further reinforced by the Soviet Flotilla which recently visited Cuba in apparent retaliation for President Nixon's visit to Romania.

The development is said to be prompted partly by wider political considerations of the Kremlin.

It may be intended to convey to the United States and its NATO allies that despite Soviet preoccupation with China, Russian power in Europe remains strong, diplomatic sources said.

Lack of progress in the Middle East talks with the United States and growing Arab disillusionment with Russian assistance are yet another factor seen behind the new Soviet naval buildup in the Mediterranean.

Election Result Decides Mrs. Gandhi's Fate

Today's the Day in India

From New Delhi
By WILLIAM COUGHLIN

Former U.S. ambassador Chester Bowles had a word of advice about India in a conversation shortly before he departed for home earlier this year. He suggested one should never underestimate the ability of Indians to overcome a seemingly insurmountable crisis.

For India's ruling Congress Party, that theory will get its severest test this week. The ballot boxes which have been under armed guard since last Saturday's presidential election will be opened and the votes counted today.

Never has there been a presidential election here of such importance. The outcome is expected to determine the fate of Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, the future of the party which has ruled the nation since independence and the political and economic destiny of India itself.

In a rebellion against the candidates elected by her own party, Mrs. Gandhi has staked her office on a victory for former vice-president V. V. Giri, who resigned as acting president to run as an independent.

Giri became president pro tem after the death last May of India's third president, Dr. Zakir Husain.

If Giri wins, Mrs. Gandhi will have demonstrated the political strength to carry India further down the path of socialism and to purge any right-wing opposition.

Election of Congress Party candidate Sanjiva Reddy will result in right-wing domination of the party and most likely the resignation of the prime minister.

The president is elected by members of the national and state assemblies. The ballot is preferential and counting will continue until one candidate of the 15 receives a majority. Only Giri and Reddy are given any chance of victory.

Congress Party president Siddavvanahalli Nijalingappa obviously was in no mood Tuesday to kiss and make up with the prime minister after the ballots are counted.

He said a meeting of the party's working committee would be called later this week to consider disciplinary action against the prime minister and her colleagues. He again accused Mrs. Gandhi and two of the cabinet ministers who joined her fight of undermining party discipline.

For her part, Mrs. Gandhi declared that the Congress Party can be revitalized only by leadership "which thinks, speaks and acts with unity of purpose."

Efforts of party peacemakers met with little success and the split in the party appeared beyond repair.

If Mrs. Gandhi is forced from office, Home Minister Y. B. Chavan is considered the most likely to succeed her. He is close to the right-wing party elders but has refrained from open attack against Mrs.

Gandhi and her supporters.

The other likely candidate, former deputy prime minister Morarji Desai, has made too many vituperative statements against the prime minister during the campaigning to be acceptable to the party's left wing.

Bogside Catholics Use Lull to Rearm

By ROBERT C. TOTH
From Londonderry

Here in the Bogside where Ireland's current "troubles" began, a barricade society has taken shape while Catholics wait for the British government to force reform on Ulster.

Dozens of stewards with white linen bands tied around their arms patrol their policeless, soldierless streets with stout clubs. Children have mock wars with sticks and garbage can lids to shield them from rock barrages.

Morale is high. A woman carrying huge bundles of clothing was asked if she were leaving. Leaving the Bogside? "You're joking. These are for the refugees in Belfast."

Barber shops are thriving — standing-room-only in several — but the pubs in the afternoon are surprisingly empty.

"We still keep legal hours," said one publican. "10 to 10, sort of. These permitted hours were very elastic during the worst of the fighting here. But soon thereafter the women came down with the clergy, you know." Paddy the Barman explained with a shrug.

Miss Bernadette Devlin, 23-year-old firebrand member of parliament, had also urged a visit from "the women." She has tried to keep Bogside Catholics at the barricades in force despite British army protection.

"Dad! What's a Catholic?"

violent or like that," he added quickly, "just for her to stop stirring things up. Some of the lads are going out baiting the police in the town."

Patrick Dougherty, chairman of the Derry citizens Defence Association, painted the receding of Bernadette more kindly. "She was very tired and it was explained to her that she needn't feel she had to carry the whole burden," he said. "She's climbing no more barricades, you'll notice."

At least for now, it must be added. For the army can quickly become the hated symbol of authority, as police were in this grey Catholic slum. And the weapons are here for use.

The street-corner petrol bomb plant of last week has been removed from sight, but not by much. Some houses are boarded up but not closed. If you'll get my meaning, winked an elderly man. "And they've been busy, aye, they have."

Hundreds if not thousands of Molotov cocktails are waiting for the next round, if it comes, complete with experienced advisers on how to tighten the rag wicks lest flaming gasoline spill back on the hurler, and all the other niceties of barricade defence.

But the petrol bombs and the rocks were "last week's weapons," said one Bogside veteran impatiently. "That was the Stone Age. The guns are out now. It'll be 1922 all over again."

That was surely a vintage year for Catholic and protestant killings — 232 all told, with nearly 1,000 wounded and over $12,000,000 in damage.

But the pessimist friends disagreed with his fearful prediction. British troops have taken over all of Ulster now, they said. "Let them take care of the B-specials and the IRA," said one man.

If violence comes now, it will probably be elsewhere — in crowded Belfast or a border town, perhaps. The insurrection has passed beyond Bogside now, into the panned rooms of Downing Street and the blue-carpeted halls of the United Nations.

Yet at its crumbling barricades of sewer pipes and paving slabs, wheelbarrows and infant push chairs, and under the rusting cannon on Derry's walls, that still symbolize the Protestant victory of 1690, one recalls the poem of W. B. Yeats on the Easter rising, 1916 in Dublin: "All changed, changed utterly: 'A terrible beauty is born.'"

Trudeau Case Decision Reserved

VANCOUVER (CP)—A justice of the peace Tuesday reserved until Friday afternoon his decision on whether Prime Minister Trudeau should be brought to court to face a common assault complaint sworn out by a 17-year-old Ontario youth.

Don Stewart reserved decision after an hour and 40 minutes of confusing testimony from police and others as to whether Mr. Trudeau hit anybody, and if so whom.

"HIT IN FACE"

The complaint was laid by Richard Bruce Jesmer of Niagara Falls, Ont., who claimed he was struck in the face by Mr. Trudeau during an Anti-Vietnam war demonstration Aug. 8.

His testimony was supported by Frederick John Stowe, 18, of Mississauga, Ont., who said he was standing eight feet away at the time and "I could see him strike Mr. Jesmer."

FIST CLENCHED

Gerald Boulter, 22, of Barrie, Ont., said he saw Mr. Trudeau "swing into the crowd." He said Mr. Trudeau had said something like "Och, I'd really like to get somebody."

Mr. Boulter said the prime minister's fist was clenched and "I saw him hit somebody in the crowd about eight feet away... I saw the person hit fall back."

"VERY VIOLENT"

City police detective Robert Welsh, identified Jesmer in court and said of him: "This person was very violent and shouting toward Pierre Elliott Trudeau. I observed somebody either push him or grab him away..."

Sub-Inspector Victor Irving, in charge of RCMP security, said he did not see Mr. Trudeau strike anybody.

"BEST POSITION"

"I pushed several people aside and I did not see the prime minister strike anybody... I believe I was probably in the best position of anybody there to see whether the prime minister struck anybody."

Insp. Irving said his eyes might have been off the prime minister momentarily while pushing people out of the way.

Oak Bay Election Corner

Dr. G. Scott Wallace

That local beaches should be polluted with human faeces in an era when technology can place men on the moon is hard to believe. This pollution results from sewage being discharged through outfalls so short, that at low tide, the sewage is discharged on to the beach. Action to clean up this health hazard must be given top priority. The Greater Victoria Sewerage Study carried out by engineers in 1966 recommended that construction of extended outfalls to stated distances and at stated depths, without primary treatment, would correct the situation. Confusion exists in the minds of the public since the validity of the study has been questioned by various professionals, such as biologists, oceanographers and doctors on the basis that insufficient study has been done on the nature of the currents, tides, etc., in the receiving waters. The Pollution Committee of the Victoria Medical Society and the Environmental Health Committee of the B.C. Medical Association have expressed concern over the proposed sewage disposal into our coastal waters until the necessary detailed ocean studies have been performed and evaluated. It would indeed be folly to proceed with the proposed installation of outfalls and possibly also primary treatment plants, at very considerable expense, only to find that we had created one large cesspool off shore, due to lack of adequate ocean current. If elected, I would strongly advocate the immediate creation of a study group, composed of hydrographic and oceanographic experts, biologists and engineers, to begin the immediate search for the ocean data now unknown. As the situation stands today, this is the only sensible step to take, for the Sewerage Report itself includes the statement, "much more extensive oceanographic data must be obtained."

Clock Ran Out on All But One

By ALAN ANDERSON
Five of the seven candidates for Victoria riding in the Aug. 27 provincial election showed up at an "all candidates" Kwantlen Club luncheon meeting Tuesday at the Empress Hotel and only one of the five finished talking when he was supposed to.

The two no-shows were Waldo Skilling, minister of industrial development, trade and commerce in the Social Credit government, and Liberal candidate Ian Stewart, whose running mates apologized for their absence.

The man who stopped talking when the moderator's bell rang was Liberal M.L.A. Couvelier, and he got a burst of applause for it.

Document M.L.A. W. N. Chan, minister of public works, led off with a defence of the Social Credit government's achievements. "We have done what all the other parties only talked about doing," he said.

He listed Social Credit achievements in electric power, industrial development, social welfare and education. "I look forward to a great future for the entire province, and especially for Victoria," he said.

Mr. Chan went one minute over the seven minutes allotted for each speaker, and stopped only when the audience drowned out what he was saying by applauding.

Philip Fawcett, NDP candidate, opened with an offhand reference to "that continuous chant we've been hearing," which got a laugh, and then went on to introduce himself as a teacher, scoutmaster and Sunday school worker in Alberta and B.C.

He said Premier Bennett was "making fantastic claims about the NDP" and its leadership, which demonstrated that Mr. Bennett was "the only wild man around."

There was only one fairy tale left to tell, he said. "That is that after we win, we will take all the little boys and girls in British Columbia, put them into an oven and bake them into little Social Credit cookies, and eat them."

Berger on Secondary Industry:

Economic Council Pledged

VANCOUVER (CP) — Opposition Leader Tom Berger said Tuesday a New Democratic Party government would establish an "Economic Council of British Columbia" to channel development of secondary industry if the party wins in the Aug. 27 provincial election.

Mr. Berger told a news conference after returning from a tour of the B.C. Interior that the council would be similar in structure and function to the Economic Council of Canada, which advises the federal government on economic and fiscal policies.

SECONDARY INDUSTRY
"The B.C. council would have a permanent chairman and a staff of economists and financial experts recruited from private industry, universities and trade unions."

Mr. Berger blasted the 17-year-old Social Credit government of Premier W. A. C. Bennett for "flying by the seat of its pants" in development of secondary industry.

"Throughout the Bennett years we've had a high rate of unemployment—higher than the national average," said the 36-year-old NDP leader. "We've got to process our raw materials here."

Mr. Berger said Social Credit's export-oriented primary industry policies have seriously impaired growth of secondary industries in the province and "the trouble is that primary industries don't generate enough jobs."

His proposed council would suggest guidelines to the cabinet and the legislature but final decisions on implementation of new policies would rest with the government.

Mr. Berger cited the Columbia River Treaty under which Canada sells B.C. hydro-electric power to the U.S. as one of the worst examples of Premier Bennett's emphasis on exporting resources.

"The premier can't point to five cents worth of new investment in B.C. as a result of the Columbia River Treaty," he said. "People in the Kootenays realize that it was an improvident treaty."

Schreyer Due Monday

For Single Big Rally

VANCOUVER (CP) — New NDP Premier Ed Schreyer of Manitoba will make a one-day visit to B.C. Monday, his only such visit during the election campaign.

Opposition Leader Tom Berger said Mr. Schreyer will make only one official appearance, at a New Westminster party rally for about 10,000. He said Mr. Schreyer wants to spend as little time as possible away from the Manitoba legislature.

Mr. Berger said he asked Labor Minister Leslie Peterson to appoint an impartial mediator before the strike started three months ago and twice more after the oil workers went on strike against six Lower Mainland refineries.

He said Mr. Peterson waited until after the oil workers expanded their picketing from the refineries to private and public companies using their products before he intervened.

"The root cause of this situation was the failure of the government to do anything to head it off during a period of three months."

ROYAL COMMISSION
Asked to comment on Premier Bennett's plan to set up a royal commission to investigate Social Credit proposals for a national negative income tax plan, Mr. Berger said he's "not crazy about it."

He said negative income tax could only be implemented properly by a federal government and added that the Bennett administration has quite a few royal commission reports collecting dust on government shelves.

He said he doubts that Ottawa or the public will take the premier seriously and that the whole thing "was dreamed up during the weekend" by Mr. Bennett's public relations people.

"It's difficult for anybody to take Premier Bennett seriously these days," he said. "The only extremist left in the province is W. A. C. Bennett."

'Tight Squeeze' for Forces

squadrons currently in NATO are equipped to carry nuclear weapons. An artillery battery with the Canadian brigade group in Germany can also fire nuclear weapons.

Canada's home defence Voodoo interceptor squadrons and Bomarc anti-aircraft missiles also are nuclear-equipped.

Gen. Allard said Canada should not expect other countries to "get their hands dirty" while maintaining clean hands, itself.

He also maintained that to advocate the disappearance of nuclear weapons "on which the West's deterrent capability relies" is "almost to advocate war."

"I find this immoral," he added.

Asked whether he is satisfied with the government's defence policy, the 56-year-old general replied that the country is hard pressed to maintain its economic equilibrium.

The defence forces must play their part in helping correct this situation.

Gen. Allard, who retires Sept. 15 and will be succeeded by Lt.-Gen. Frederick Sharp, at present deputy-commander-in-chief of NORAD, forecast that Canada's regular forces after the current pruning program ends in 1971 will total a little over 80,000 compared with the present 98,000.

Asked whether he believes Canada can meet its commitments with a force in the 80,000 range, Gen. Allard replied: "It is going to be very tight."

Strike-Caused Shortage Could Jump Nickel Price

TORONTO (CP) — A strike-caused shortage of nickel, a strategic metal in North American, European and Japanese industry, could have far-reaching effects, the most notable being a substantial price jump to users.

The shortage began about seven weeks ago when 16,000 members of the United Steel Workers of America left their jobs at the largest nickel producer in the Western world, International Nickel Co. of Canada.

The shortage will become more acute if 3,200 workers at Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd., Canada's second largest producer, go on strike as they may do Thursday.

MORE THAN HALF

Falconbridge last year produced 70,000,000 pounds of the metal and, with Inco's 480,000,000 pounds, supplied more than half the nickel consumed in the Western world and Japan.

The increased price already has developed in the so-called "grey market" where a pound of the metal now is selling for $4. The world price, agreed to last December by major manufacturers, is $1.03 U.S. a pound, or $1.11 Canadian.

Most users now are getting only 35 per cent of their pre-strike requirements and other sources of supply are becoming increasingly costly or difficult to obtain.

MANY ITEMS

Affected by the shortage will be a wide range of industrial and construction items, ranging from automobiles to supermarket pushcarts, bathroom fixtures to jet engines, coffee pots to food processing equipment.

Specialist steel makers, who use nickel in stainless steel, now are refusing orders for high nickel-bearing steels and are switching to alloys requiring a lower nickel content.

Allocation of the available supply of nickel has been organized by the federal government since a world shortage developed three years ago. Officially,

Canadian users are limited to 100 per cent of their 1966 usage, but with the addition of new users and government permission for the producers to supply some consumers with additional requirements, consumption of nickel has increased in Canada from the 1966 level of 1,500,000 pounds a month to 2,200,000 a month.

The 35 per cent of the pre-strike requirement users are getting now is being supplied mainly from 8,100,000 pounds available from Inco's nickel mines in Thomson, Man.

Canadian Breweries has a cash surplus of about $50,000,000.

Half of it, or thereabouts, is to be distributed to shareholders at the rate of $1 a share in the shape of an extra dividend payable Oct. 31.

John Devlin, president of both Canbrew and Rothmans of Pall Mall Canada, says the extra is being paid as a "thank you" to the many Canbrew shareholders who did not offer their shares to Phillip Morris in the recent battle for Canbrew control.

What Devlin did not spell out was that the biggest beneficiaries of the "handout" will be Rothmans themselves.

The Rothmans group holds more than 50 per cent of the common shares of Canadian Breweries 21,782,295 outstanding shares, so their own "thank you" present will be worth more than $10,000,000.

It might indeed be regarded as a delayed down payment on the June purchase of 38.5 per cent of Canbrew shares by Rothmans Holdings Canada Ltd., and also an effective way of disposing of the surplus capital tied up in the Canbrew books.

Rothmans at the same time announced the way it proposes to finance the $107,000,000 it spent in the acquisition of Canbrew stock.

WORLD GOBOL

The sum of $57,000,000 will be provided by the Rothman world group of companies on terms not disclosed, and a further $50,000,000 through a rights offering to shareholders of Rothmans of Pall Mall Canada Ltd.

Common shareholders of Rothmans will be given rights to purchase three 6% per cent preferred cumulative, convertible, redeemable shares at price and under conditions yet to be announced.

The rest of the funding requirements will presumably be from Rothmans' share of the Canbrew extra dividend.

MARKET REACTION

The market reaction to the plan was to increase the value of Canbrew stock by nearly $1 to $9 1/2, and to depress Rothmans from $21 to $19 1/2.

The drop in Rothmans indicated market assessment of the proposed preferred issue which when converted will increase the outstanding common shares of Rothmans from 1,600,000 to 6,400,000 plus an extra 1,475,000 warrants already outstanding.

CELLAR JOB FOR VMD

A second component of the Lockheed Missiles and Space Company's underwater petroleum system is to be made by Victoria Machinery Dept. The Victoria firm will build for the Vancouver firm, a 21-foot-high steel cellar which will be fitted permanently over each wellhead on the ocean floor.

The cellar is used in conjunction with the steel capsule in which oil workers will be lowered from the surface to maintain and operate the well requires its own cellar.

While one capsule can serve up to 100 wells, each new well required its own cellar.

BANK MAKES PROGRESS

British Columbia's only chartered bank is making progress at a rate at which its president Albert Hall says is "vigorous."

In the third quarter ended July 31, the Bank of British Columbia increased its assets to $56,000,000, an increase of $12,000,000 in the past three months.

Growth is attributable, says the president, to opening of new accounts in all categories.

The bank pays 4 1/2 per cent on its chequing-savings accounts, the highest of any chartered bank in Canada.

Although it has been operating only a little more than a year, the bank is having to enlarge its main branch at Pender and Burrard, and before the end of the fiscal year on Oct. 31, it will have opened new branches at Penitence, Vancouver, Victoria and Nanaimo, making eight in all.

MICROFILM ANSWER

The main bottleneck in the computer industry is in translating on to paper the volume of information spewed out by the computer.

The answer lies in use of a magnetic tape which in turn is translated to microfilm by what is called the electron beam recording system.

PEAK EFFICIENCY

This enables the computer to operate at peak efficiency all the time, and the microfilm also provides as many duplicate copies as required at a fraction of the low cost of the original. The problem of storing information is also tremendously reduced.

Micro-Graphic Ltd. is a Vancouver company recently formed to provide this type of service for Western Canada. The first computerfilm service centre was one opened last month in Seattle.

The new Vancouver company is expecting to make a public offering of its shares in the near future.

Massey-Ferguson Acquisition

Argentine Plant 'Major Force'

TORONTO (UPI) — Massey-Ferguson, the Canadian-based world leader in farm machinery production, said Tuesday it has re-established itself as "a major force" in Argentina with the acquisition of a German-owned tractor manufacturing plant in the city of Rosario.

The announcement of the acquisition of Rhein Stahl Hanomag S.A., was made by Massey-Ferguson president Albert Thornbrough. The plant was formerly controlled by Rhein Stahl Hanomag, A.G., of Germany.

Employing 550 people, the plant has an area of 215,000 square feet and has been in operation since 1960. Its productive capacity is about 4,000 tractors a year.

Massey-Ferguson first established a branch in Buenos Aires in 1917. It had a substantial share of the farm machinery market, until 1966 when import restrictions were instituted.

Since that time it has had to limit its activities to the sale of implements, parts and service.

Thornbrough said he was "particularly pleased that the company is able to return to Argentina as a major force. Argentina is the largest farm machinery market in which MF is not now operating on a major scale. It offers very interesting growth possibilities against the background of world food needs and the country's rapidly developing economy."

The company's other South American interests include manufacturing plants in Brazil and Mexico.

Coasting Trade Probe Launched by Ottawa

OTTAWA (CP) — The federal transport department announced Tuesday terms of reference for a special inquiry into laws regulating the Canadian coasting trade.

In the past the coasting trade, the transport of passengers and goods between Canadian ports, has been reserved for Commonwealth or Irish vessels. Traffic between ports on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River system has been limited to Canadian-registered vessels.

The inquiry, to be conducted by the Canadian transport com-

Canada Offers Aid for India

NEW DELHI (Reuters) — Canada has agreed to provide India with 60,000,000 rupees, about $10,140,000, as agricultural assistance to buy wheat for her buffer stock, a spokesman for the Canadian high commission said.

He said the wheat would be obtained through the Canadian wheat board and would be shipped by mid-September.

Crux In Seattle

VANCOUVER (CP)—Duncan Crux, former head of the Commonwealth group of companies, was in Seattle Tuesday but Canadian authorities said they would make no attempt to bring him here.

Mr. Crux is free on $75,000 property bail pending the outcome of extradition hearings in the Bahamas, dealing with fraud charges laid by B.C. authorities.

A. D. Peter Stanley, named by the provincial government a year ago to manage Commonwealth Trust, said: "There is no reason why Mr. Crux cannot visit Seattle if he wishes. He has made several trips to Seattle that we know of since he was arrested in the Bahamas on June 3."

Proceedings in the Nassau hearing have been adjourned until Oct. 1.

Meatcutters

Last-Minute Move Seeks Picket Bar

VANCOUVER (CP)—Negotiations for striking meatcutters and supermarkets met Tuesday in a last-minute bid to settle differences before the union moved to expand picketing activities today.

George Johnston, union business manager, said the talks were called by mediation officer Clive McKee. No further details were released.

Mr. Johnston said picketing would expand to include wholesale and retail outlets operated by W. H. Malkin Ltd., five Shop Easy stores, a Food Fair store, two High-Low supermarkets and five wholesale depots.

The 800 meatcutters Tuesday

picketed Super-Valu stores and five stores of the Lodom chain.

George Robson, a spokesman for the supermarkets, said picketing of Malkin's would affect more than 100 independent grocers in the mainland who up until now have eased the impact on the pulse of the meatcutters' dispute.

Meanwhile talks continued Tuesday in hopes of settling a three-month strike by 550 oil workers.

Union spokesman R. T. Philp said the purpose of talks Tuesday with Texaco was to clarify the issues. He refused to comment on progress.

Edmonton Buses

Drivers Meeting

EDMONTON (CP) — City bus drivers called a union membership meeting for Thursday as their strike moved into its fifth day Tuesday and hitch-hiking became a way of life for city residents.

A spokesman for the Amalgamated Transit Union local representing 625 bus drivers and maintenance personnel said the meeting Thursday afternoon has been called to determine if the members still support their union leaders.

"We will go through the issues again and the members will be brought up to date," he said.

But while the union membership was scheduling the meeting, there were no indications plans were being laid for union representatives to meet with city officials.

Prospects for a quick settlement of the strike dimmed Monday when city and union representatives emerged from unsuccessful talks.

Pact Ends Strike

Miners Back on Job

MURDOCHVILLE, Que. (CP) — Nearly 700 workers employed by Gaspe Copper Mines Ltd. are back on the job following acceptance of a memorandum of agreement which ended a three-month strike.

The memorandum was signed Monday by the company and representatives of the United Steelworkers of America.

A spokesman for the company said a formal collective agreement would be signed before next week, providing the workers with an average 65-cent hourly increase spread over three years.

The workers struck May 14 asking for an average 75-cent hourly increase. Average salary stood at $2.66 an hour before the strike.

By ALEC MERRIMAN

Hunters who go out after deer on Vancouver Island this fall are expected to be able to bag only half the estimated 24,000 they got last fall.

That was the dismal outlook presented to Victoria Fish and Game Club members this week by Bud Smith, game technician from the provincial fish and wildlife branch.

He blamed last winter's cold weather and heavy snows for the "worst spring carry-over count we have ever had on Vancouver Island."

Some years, he said, there is a 35 to 37 per cent count of fawns which manage to get through the winter.

This year the count showed only 16 per cent... lowest on record. The previous low was 25 per cent.

He added more gloom. In 1951 loggers had reported six bull elk that had died of malnutrition. "I also know of two others that died in the 1950s. This year I know of 13 dead elk — adult bulls, young bulls and cows."

He explained that as a result of the bad winter and severe losses, hunting seasons have been reduced on both elk and deer.

On the southern half of the Island (south of Campbell River) the buck deer season will be Sept. 6 to Nov. 16 and the antlerless season Nov. 8 to Nov. 16, a two-week cutback at the tail end of the season in both cases.

On the northern half of the Island (north of Campbell River) the buck deer season will be Sept. 6 to Dec. 7 and the antlerless season Nov. 8 to Dec. 7, a one-week cutback.

The elk season will be only for the northern half of the Island and has been shortened by a month. It will be for bucks only from Sept. 6 to Oct. 13.

SPLIT GROUSE SEASON

Blue grouse season will be a week shorter on the southern half of the Island, from Aug. 30 to Dec. 7, and Aug. 30 to Dec. 7 on northern half, first time there has been a split grouse season on the Island. Ruffed grouse season is unchanged, from Aug. 30 to Dec. 7.

There will be a bow and arrow season for bull deer Aug. 30 to Sept. 5.

"It is going to be a fine season for recreation... lots of fresh air, lots of opportunity to be close to nature, and enough deer so you will be able to shoot some," said Smith.

PROMISING

He was more optimistic about the grouse-shooting outlook. "It looks like it will be a better year than it has been the last couple of years," he said.

"The brood sizes are bigger. The weather was just right during the chick season."

He advised hunters it might be better to go after grouse, rather than deer, this season.

He explained that it was decided to shorten seasons to conserve deer populations, rather than to cut the bag limit, because only 10 per cent of the hunters normally bag their three deer in any event.

He felt hunters do not hurt the deer population by taking antlerless animals.

COULD BE CHANGED

He added that the game branch is not inflexible. It will be watching hunter success throughout the season and will impose hunting curtailments if necessary. It is easier to put the season in and then close it, than it is to extend it if a greater harvest is sought, he explained.

Smith said "hunters are not influencing the total deer population yet."

Logging operations are the real deer-population regulator, he said.

"This business of a bad winter has come before and it will come again," he explained and noted a few mild winters would see the deer population increase and more animals harvested.

TRYING TO EQUALIZE

When fish and game members expressed fears that an extended north Island season would put extra hunting pressure on that part of the Island, Smith said the game department is trying to filter people north to utilize the deer population.

"They had a tremendous winter kill because there were too many deer for the range."

The most deer come from the southern Island, Smith said... 3,4 deer harvested a square mile in the south, compared to less than two deer square mile in the north.

He thought that when all of Vancouver Island is intensely hunted in years to come deer harvest may reach as high as 50,000 deer a year.

SAFARI PLANNED

This year a number of Victoria Fish and Game Club members will go after their deer the hard way. They are organizing a hunting party to go to the Nimpkish country Aug. 30 to go after them with bow and arrow.

For several weeks now a new archery section has been practicing Monday nights under direction of Victoria Bowman Bill Hall and next Wednesday they will go to the Wolfert Range for some last minute field shoot training to prepare them for the Nimpkish hunt.

Treat to Watch

All that keeps Angel Hermoso from big league career at moment is a lack of power. Owned by Montreal Expos, Hermoso is rated one of outstanding defensive infielders in professional baseball. He'll be here Saturday when Vancouver Mounties and Portland Beavers play scheduled Pacific Coast League game at Pacific Athletic Park. Game time is 1:30 p.m. and tickets are on sale at Memorial Arena.

Brothers Collide Result Is a Tie

A collision between brothers Tuesday night at Royal Athletic Park may have cost Independents a 3-0 lead over Gorge Hotel in the best-of-seven Senior Baseball League playoff final.

Independents appeared to have something going in the last of the seventh inning with Ken Hawkins on second base, Barry Cosier on first base, the score tied at 3-3 and only one out.

Craig Lawrence followed by hitting a grounder to shortstop Tony Cosier, who got the second out by stepping on second base, away, he was hit hard by his older brother, the ball got away and Ken Hawkins raced across the plate with what momentum appeared to be the tie-breaking run.

But interference was called on the elder Cosier, Lawrence was declared out and the game called because of darkness.

Whether the double play would have been completed is a matter of opinion but Independents' know they now can't clinch until at least Sunday.

Third game of the series will be played Thursday starting at 6:30 and the fourth game on Sunday starting at 2 p.m. If the series has not been won by then, resumption of the Tuesday game will follow immediately.

Pearce Unbeatable After Shaky Start

Never in trouble after a first-inning jam, Brian Pearce pitched a 3-0 victory Tuesday as Bate Construction took the first game of their best-of-three Major Men's Softball League semi-final series with Luckies at Central Park.

Pearce gave up first-inning singles to Roy St. Denis and Larry Montgomery but retired the next three batters without letting the ball out of the infield. He allowed only three more hits the rest of the way.

Jim Moody gave Pearce the only run he was to need in the bottom half of the inning, leading off with a single and scoring on Darrell Lorimer's double.

Bates scored one more run in the second inning when Doug Gregory singled and came in on Don Lancaster's double. The final run was scored in the seventh inning on Don Stevenson's double and Ken Bate's single.

Molsons, leading their semi-final series, 1-0, can move into the final series with a win Thursday over Langford Drywall at Central Park starting at 6:30 p.m.

Briscoe Leaves Club Healthy Lions Scarce

VANCOUVER — B.C. Lions will have trouble fielding a full quota of healthy players for their Canadian Football League game here Saturday against Toronto Argonauts.

A grim injury picture was further complicated Tuesday when Marlin Briscoe left for his home in Omaha after one day of a five-day trial.

Briscoe, a Negro quarterback recently cut by Denver Broncos of the American Football League, claimed he was forced to return home because of personal problems and said he would return before Saturday to complete his trial period.

NOW DOUBTFUL

It had been planned to use Briscoe as a defence back if he showed enough in workouts to warrant a starting chance, but his departure may have shelved those plans even if he returns.

Lions already have two players who are likely to be through for the season, one who won't be ready to play for another two weeks and a fourth who is a doubtful starter Saturday. In addition, several other Lions are nursing injuries which don't need much aggravation to become serious.

Sure to be missing Saturday are Canadian receiver Lach Heron and import-halfbacks Dale Brady and Jim Nicholson. Jerry Bradley, import defence back, is listed as a doubtful starter.

Brady has knee-cartilage problems and the Memphis State star, handicapped all last season by a bad ankle, is not expected to play again this season.

LED TO ANOTHER

Bradley has a muscle pull which puts him in the doubtful category, and which resulted in the serious injuries which may have put Heron out for the season.

Because of Bradley's gimp leg, Heron replaced him as a punter-returner in Saturday's game in Hamilton and suffered a collapsed lung and three broken ribs after fielding a kick.

Nicholson, a speedster who showed well in pre-season play, had to have an operation to correct a severe muscle injury and is perhaps two weeks away from his first league appearance.

F. A. Sims is another listed in the doubtful category. The starry defence-end has a bad knee which handicapped him in his last two games and which could give away at any time.

Fullbacks Jim Evenson and Brad Johnson have a sprained toe and stretched knee ligament, respectively, but both are expected to play Saturday.

Reinforcements will be brought in when U.S. pro clubs start making late cuts but Lions will have to go with what they have left Saturday.

Not unexpected but sort of adding the final touch was the word Tuesday that the Lions' protest of their 22-20 defeat by Saskatchewan on Aug. 3 has been disallowed by CFL commissioner Jake Gaudaur.

The only good news was that defence-back Craig Murray, injured in the game in Regina, will probably play Saturday.

Tonight's CFL game between Calgary and Winnipeg will be telecast over Channel 8 starting at 8 p.m.

HARRY YOUNG

The peaceful and sporting game of golf has been confronted in the past few days by several incidents, very different in character, but all of some significance.

The first was the happening at Dayton, Ohio, during the playing of the U.S. PGA championship when civil rights groups invaded the course and apparently made South Africa's Gary Player a target for their displeasure.

Whether the demonstration was against Player, because of his country's apartheid policy, or against the PGA generally for refusing to give the group a block of 3,000 free tickets to the show is not clear.

In any case it is a sad matter that a game which offers its pleasures to all and sundry should be smeared by racial violence.

The tone of the game was also besmirched when the eventual winner was called upon by the USPGA to write a letter of apology to a fellow competitor whom he had abused for what he termed "slow play."

In Canada, Mrs. Marlene Stewart Streit was accused by a CPGA official in the final of the Canadian Ladies Championship of infringing the "one clean" rule in the final against Barbara Turnbull and threatened with a penalty.

Mrs. Streit, whose long record of success makes her one of the outstanding golfers of her generation, had in effect been asked by her opponent to lift her ball, and was therefore entitled to a second clean.

Mrs. Streit was visibly upset, as she was well entitled to be.

Right in Victoria during the B.C. pro-am tournament last week, one of the professionals did not help the sporting cause when he called upon a number of innocent bystanders to "get to hell out of here" because they were upsetting his amateur partners.

Before oddsmen shake their heads at these mod manifestations and bewail the passing of the good old days, it is well to remember that the present may just be a reincarnation of the pioneer past.

More than a hundred years ago when Willie Park was playing a draw-out money match with Tom Morris, of St. Andrews, the partisan Musselburgh miners stamped Morris's ball so often into the ground that Tom and the referee repaired to a nearby pub and refused to resume as long as the crowd remained.

Also in the 1850-60s there were fights in the money matches between the followers of the Duns, the Parks, the Robertson and the Morris of hallowed memory, which like the incidents at Dayton did nothing to improve the prestige of the game.

So it isn't new, and no doubt as prize-money and inducements increase, the sporting atmosphere will continue to be in jeopardy. But I like to think of golf as a game whose rules are made for interpretation by gentlemen (and ladies).

Old fashioned?

The most hated rules in golf are to be changed at the end of this year if the plans of the Royal and Ancient, the U.S. Golf Association and the Royal Canadian Golf Association are finally approved by those bodies.

Going out after two controversial years are the "continuous-putting" and "one-clean" rules, and there will be few to mourn their passing.

Statements made by the Rules of Golf committees of the British and U.S. authorities indicate that the switch-back to the status quo was because the one-and-only reason for the changes — to speed play — had not been effective.

Instead, many complications and difficulties were created in the enforcement of the new rules, and the main objection of players at large was that they offended the basic rule of golf — that the ball furthest from the hole is played first.

What is not generally known about the abolition of the two rules is that the momentum for revision was supplied by the Royal Canadian Golf Association.

Its "waiver" provision incorporated as an optional procedure has been adopted by most tournament committees this year, and the RCGA also informed the British and U.S. authorities that it would not wait beyond the beginning of 1970 to abolish the controversial rules.

Two members of the RCGA attended a meeting of the R. and A. rules committee in St. Andrews last May, and it was at their insistence that immediate contact should be made between the British and U.S. authorities to agree in principle to the change so that it might be implemented at the turn of the year.

If action had not been taken then, the cumbersome procedure of the R. and A. would have made a rule change impossible before 1971.

Lavender

The other day, while having coffee in the window booth of a downtown restaurant, I saw a young hippie go by with his hair tied back in a pony tail. And on him it looked good!

Pulled back tightly and tied, his hair was much neater than that of his shock-headed companions and it did need much effort of the imagination to strip him of his bulky sweater and faded blue jeans and dress him in breeches, knee hose and buckled shoes; he would have been a dead ringer for one of the scented dandies of 17th century London.

From here my thoughts progressed to Drury Lane, Nell Gwyn, orange peddlers, and the street vendors of lavender and rosemary.

Lavender is a remarkably easy shrub to grow in our climate, either from purchased plants, seeds or cuttings. Local nurseries will usually have in stock either the Munstead variety, considered the most fragrant, or the so-called French lavender, with prettier and deeper-colored flowers.

When grown from seed, there are lots of different kinds to choose from. The seed firm of Thompson and Morgan Ltd. of Ipswich, England, lists quite a number of varieties, including a white-flowered form and a little honey of a plant growing only nine inches tall and staggering through life under the jaw-breaking name of Lavandula spica nana atropurpurea Hidcote variety!

Seed sown almost any time through the spring, summer or early fall months will produce fine little shrublets to set out next year. Sow in an unheated greenhouse, a coldframe, or in a sheltered, semi-shaded outdoor seed bed.

As long as it is a bit on the limy side, any ordinary garden soil will do for lavender. This plant is a great lime lover, and the famous Yardley plantations are grown on light gravelly soil overlying almost pure chalk. Soak the seeds overnight before sowing.

If you can beg some prunings from a neighbor, use vigorous young shoots about seven inches long. Remove the lower leaves, dip the cut end in rooting powder, and insert in sandy soil in your coldframe or in a shaded outdoor bed.

While this treatment works well with rosemary cuttings too, I have never had any luck at all in starting this shrub from seed; in fact, I couldn't even get the seeds to germinate. Looking back at my attempt, I believe my failure could have come about as a result of over-watering — from using soil too rich and too moist.

In its natural state, rosemary seeds itself freely and germinates vigorously on the rocky, sun-baked cliffs and headlands of Southern France, in poor, hungry soil and not much moisture. I think that if I were to try another sowing, I would try to duplicate these conditions by using a mixture of sandy loam soil and small gravel, kept only just barely moistened.

If left untrimmed, rosemary makes a pretty big bush, often six feet in height, with pungent, aromatic foliage. It needn't take up this much space, though, for it stands trimming well, and the size and shape can be controlled fairly easily.

Lavender grows from nine inches to four feet tall, depending on variety, and will also tolerate shearing as long as it is done consistently, so it never becomes necessary to cut away back into old wood.

Rosemary leaves are useful both in the kitchen and for sprinkling in the linen closet to impart a refreshing scent to sheets and pillow cases. To harvest, cut a few shoots or small branches and hang these, head down, in the corner of your kitchen out of the sun. When dry, strip off the leaves by pulling the shoots between your fingers. Store in jars with tight lids as you would sage or any other aromatic herb.

"Well, now, you must be Mr. and Mrs. Throkimer. I'm George Grommet and I'll be happy to show you around Peaceful Dell Acres. As we like to say, 'We don't just sell homes at Peaceful Dell, we sell peace of mind.'"

"Please don't touch that fence, folks. It's got 220,000 volts running through it."

"Now if you'll just show the guard here some identification — your birth certificate, passport, anything like that. Fine, fine. Now watch close. The guard puts his key in over there and I put a key in over here — upsy-daisy! — there goes the portcullis. Great idea requiring two keys. We got it from the Minuteman Missile security program."

"Okay, folks. Just step right in. Welcome to Peaceful Dell. If you'll just pause a minute in front of the X-ray machine here. Fine. Now turn sideways. Fine. No weapons. Not that we thought you'd be carrying any — ha, ha. Just routine for all arrivals."

"Now we'll just cross over the moat here. I wouldn't put my hand in, Mrs. Throkimer, if I were you. Those piranha are mighty mean. Just another precaution to make you feel more secure."

"Now you see these guard towers on top of the inner wall? They're manned around the clock and those searchlights are going all night long. And maybe you noticed that plowed strip 50-foot wide as you came in. Claymore mines. Now, inside, we've got a 24-hour armored car patrol that... Look out, here comes one now. "No, I'll just get the door open here. Let's see, 42, left, 13 right, 27 left. We'll have the combination changed for you, of course. Can you give me a hand pushing it open, Mr. Throkimer? That's solid steel, 18 inches thick."

"And let me tell you, folks, that this place is a steal. Belonged to old Mike Melvin. Lived here alone for seven years. Then one night he shot a guard while trying to break out of here after dark."

"The judge ruled him legally sane. But I got my doubts. He sure is an odd one. I had a letter from him the other day from Leavenworth. He says it's just like home."

Thinking Aloud

Wars for gain are understandable, if not condonable; but it is wars for opinion — the bitterest and longest kind — that are unforgivable, because an opinion can never conquer by force and the "conquered" opinion rises again in even more violent form until it is finally slain by the facts and not by opinion.

We should not be surprised that events are outrunning institutions in our time, when we consider that the same year in which the British withdrew from India, the multi-million-dollar British Colonial Administration Building in that country was still in the process of construction.

Personal wickedness still shocks us, but what is called "statistical immorality" scarcely causes a ripple; as Dr. C. H. Waddington observed a quarter-century ago: "If a man hits a baby on the head with a hammer, we prosecute him for cruelty; but if he sells dirty milk and the infant sickness or death rate goes up, we merely fine him for violating the health laws."

The far-flung effects of pollution can be seen in recent scientific discoveries of why predatory birds are in danger of extinction: an examination of a shell's predating the automotive age indicates that air pollution is thinning the egg shells, resulting in more breakage and less hatching.

Every spiritual and ideological leader should make a special prayer each morning, not to be relieved of his enemies, but to be saved from his disciples.

Will Rogers' mordant comment has become even more urgent and relevant since he said, four decades ago: "We don't seem to be able to check crime, so why not legalize it and then tax it out of business?"

A quarrel is the result not of a failure in argument but of a failure in argument; not learning to agree, but learning how to argue productively is the first task for human amity.

Just as the duncecap passed away in the last century, so in this century will American education witness the passing of the "grade" and all the absurd and self-defeating grading practices that now retard more than advance the learning process.

If a juridical vialor from abroad examined our state laws, he would think we have lost all rationality. For instance, in one state there is a maximum 20 year sentence for destroying a house by fire, and only 10 years for destroying it by explosives.

Old saws keep falling by the wayside in this paradoxical age of ours — now it's no longer even true that "what ever goes up must come down," as dozens of orbiting satellites are demonstrating daily.

LONDON (NANA) — Jon Voight, the overnight success of Midnight Cowboy, has a logical attitude towards sudden fame. "I've gone through one course of psycho-analysis," he was saying at the Savoy, "and when I go back to America, I'll go through another course."

All this bludge about sadistic rituals in the sad tragedy of Sharon Tate and others makes me want to throw up. Sharon was just about the most normal girl I have ever met in the jungle of Hollywood. Everyone is always trying to make something worse of what is bad enough. There are scrawny aplenty with us. The terrible part is they can only be locked up after they have committed a crime.

Oscar-winning cameraman Haskell Wexler, awaiting the release of his directorial effort, Medium Cool, chose an unusual method to make his young stars, Robert Forster and Marianne Hill, feel comfortable during a nudity scene for the picture. Haskell took off his own clothes to direct the scene.

The Peter Fonda-Dennis Hopper hit, Easy Rider, is attracting strange stranger customers to the New York box office. You see a lot of motor bikes parked outside the theatre and the cigarettes are giving off an odor they tell me smells very much like pot.

Darren McGavin and Kathie Browne moved from the Hilton Hotel in Berlin into the more romantic Schloss Gehrhus in the Grunewald. Darren is starring there in the spy film, INFO Three. This good actor lives the part and is afraid to go into the communal zone in case the Russians think he is a real spy and arrest him.

Bearded Laurence Harvey in the garden at Los Ambassadeurs gave me a brief resume of his recently finished film, He and She. "He wants to be free. She is bourgeois and believes the main function of a man is to be a stud and provide well for her. They are physically compatible, but not mentally. He wins the eternal battle and destroys himself at the end. This is winning."

In the Peter Sellers-Ringo Starr movie, The Magic Christian, they go to Stratford to see Hamlet with Laurence Harvey as the gloomy Dane. He plays the part a bit differently. While reciting the "to be or not to be" soliloquy, he does a strip tease until he is stark naked. It's the only thing that hasn't been tried with Hamlet.

'Slick Artist' Imprisoned

Courtroom Parade

A 28-year-old man, described by police as "the slickest fraud artist in Western Canada," was sentenced Tuesday to three years in prison after pleading guilty in Victoria Provincial Court to 14 counts of fraud and false pretences.

John S. Hutchison of no fixed address, who once gave the RCMP at Kamloops a bad cheque to cover a $300 fine for fraud, politely pleaded guilty to each of the charges of fraudulently obtaining cash or goods with a total value of $3,740.

Among the items obtained by Hutchison with bad cheques over the last two months were three trucks, two cars and a 54-foot house trailer.

Court was told all offences were committed in the Greater Victoria area.

According to Saanich police who arrested him Thursday, Hutchison has operated across Canada leaving behind him a trail of bounced cheques and ruined people.

Det.-Sgt. Robin Stewart said several businessmen in the Victoria area had suffered badly as a result of Hutchison's fraudulent operations. He said the total value of frauds committed by the accused was estimated at about $30,000.

'Clean for a Change'

Court was told Hutchison had committed similar offences in Alberta and other parts of British Columbia.

The accused admitted these allegations and told Judge William Ostler that he would like to have these charges laid against him now.

"When I leave jail, I want to be clean for a change. Up to now, every time I got out, there were some bad cheques left, and the people put the pressure on," he said.

"That's why I got back in again."

In all instances, the accused wrote cheques against a closed account with a Calgary credit union, telling merchants he was in the process of having the account transferred to Victoria.

A 25-year-old man who told court he "was tired of doing time" was remanded for sentence until today after pleading guilty to charges of escaping custody and of car theft.

Gordon W. Bates escaped Monday from an Oakalla prison work party at the new Glendale school site in Saanich.

He stole a nearby parked car and drove to Nanaimo where he was arrested by the RCMP a few hours later.

When Judge Ostler asked him if he expected to get away with it, the accused said it was worth the gamble.

'Tired of Doing Time'

"As I said, I was tired of doing time. I would have gone to the States or somewhere."

Judge Ostler asked if he didn't want to leave his criminal life behind him and start a new life.

"You didn't have long to go; your sentence would have expired in February," he said.

"I had my fill, I just couldn't stand it anymore," Bates replied.

The judge said that it was a pity to see the accused ruin his life in such manner.

"Actually, there is nothing vicious about you. If you had only had enough sense to stay, you could have been all right."

Donn G. Paterson, 25, of 845 Princess, was fined $400 after he pleaded guilty to a charge of impaired driving. Judge Ostler also recommended the suspension of Paterson's driver's licence.

A Saanich man was fined $15 after pleading guilty to a charge of letting a dog run at large. Court was told the dog, owned by Arthur Hewitt of 219 Burnside, bit a 72-year-old woman.

Hazard Down

Rain and cooler temperatures are keeping the fire hazard down in most of the province, a spokesman for the B.C. Forest Protection Service said Tuesday.

There were five new fires reported overnight for a total of 97 burning in the province, all under control. In the Vancouver fire district, which includes Vancouver Island, there were no new fires reported.

Residents from East Sooke to Port Renfrew are eligible to compete in the fair, and there are adult and junior classes for garden produce, flowers, kitchen craft, poultry and other livestock. A pet parade for children under 12 and their animals will start from the firehall at 12:15 p.m. and end at Gibson's shopping centre.

Houseboat in Clear

Residents of Deep Cove 'Pollute Own Beaches'

By NANCY BROWN

Residents of Deep Cove are polluting their own beaches and no action will be taken against houseboat owners who were accused by residents of presenting a potential source of pollution, according to senior medical health officer Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread.

In a letter to North Saanich council Monday night, Dr. Whitbread commented on a letter from Mrs. Ethel Clark who had asked the Greater Victoria health board to seal off the "head" in a houseboat moored at Deep Cove marina.

She had previously sent a petition, signed by several other property owners to Health Minister Ralph Loffmark asking for the removal of the houseboat as a potential source of pollution so that residents could feel free to use the beaches.

Dr. Whitbread told council that according to a survey of sewage disposal systems around Deep Cove more than 50 per cent were not functioning correctly and were polluting beaches and ditches.

"This applies particularly to the residents adjacent to Deep Cove Marina," he said.

"Action against the houseboat owners, particularly when they insist that they are using the toilet facilities in the home of the marina operator on shore would be rather difficult in view of the fact that the residents on the adjacent shore are polluting beaches from their own sewage disposal systems."

The houseboat was due to leave Deep Cove last weekend.

Mr. Whitbread added that an overall bylaw is being prepared for submission to all municipalities and unorganized territories in the Greater Victoria area to regulate sewage disposal at marinas.

The North Saanich bylaw, which prohibits the discharge of any waste in bays and marinas might serve as a basis for the bylaw, said Dr. Whitbread.

Collision Car Crashes Porch

Two persons were sent to hospital Tuesday, and an estimated property damage of more than $4,000 was caused by a two-car collision at Richmond and Oak Bay.

Mrs. Sylvia Turner of 1398 Oliver and her 12-year-old daughter Peggy were treated for shock at Royal Jubilee Hospital and released.

Police said the accident occurred when the Turner car was in collision with a car driven by Mary L. White of 908 rest at 1806 Oak Bay, causing another $500 damage.

Following the collision, the Turner car crashed into the front porch of 1802 Oak Bay, causing an estimated damage of $3,500. The car finally came to it was "substantial."

Rescue Fails Five Drown

TAIPEI (UPI) — Four girls and a boy, aged 6 to 11, drowned in northern Taiwan when four of them tried to save the fifth from drowning, police reported. The victims included three sisters and their brother.

A Homeowner Grant that keeps on growing reflects a government interested in people

Return the Bennett Team!

Dynamic Social Credit policies to develop your resources for your benefit have brought British Columbia to a record high level of prosperity. Because of these policies we enjoy the finest program of services to people of any province in Canada.

Just one example is the annual Homeowner Grant — now at a record $150 and still going up. It helps you pay your local taxes and, together with the government's Home Acquisition Grant and low-cost Mortgage Loans, encourages the buying and building of new homes. Remember these programs for people when you vote on August 27th.

Pinned—Five Days, Scholar Digs Out

KANSAS CITY (AP)—A college professor who farms as a hobby says he was pinned five days under an overturned tractor until rains softened the earth so he could crawl out.

Dr. Julius E. Schulz, 55, was in hospital here with fractured ribs and possible internal injuries.

"Thank God, he's a strong man," his wife said Monday. "A lesser man could not have survived."

Schulz is six feet, four inches tall, and weighed 290 pounds before his ordeal. The family lives in Kansas City and Schulz teaches education at Northwestern Missouri State College at Maryville, Mo. The farm is near Maryville. Schulz went to the farm last Monday and began mowing a pasture. The tractor fell into a 12-foot ditch, trapping Schulz.

The professor said he was thrown partly into a stream, and had to prop his head up with a shoe to keep from drowning. He said he also removed his shirt and strained water through it for drinking. "All the while he kept taking his pulse to find out how much more he could take," his wife said he told her.

He crawled nearly a quarter of a mile to his car and drove to a neighboring farm. An ambulance brought him to Kansas City.

Mrs. Schulz said she expected the professor to be at the farm for a week, and did not report him missing. School now is in summer recess.

'New Style of Politics'

McGeer Sees Rusted Sacred Ship Sinking

By CLEMENT CHAPPEL

B.C. Liberal leader Pat McGeer demonstrated his "new style of politics" to Greater Victorians at three election rallies Tuesday, and drew one of the largest crowds seen here during the present campaign.

After a drawn-out discussion at noon in Centennial Square with a crew of about 25 hippie types, and a rain-out appearance at Colwood shopping plaza, Dr. McGeer drew more than 300 people "away from the stuffy old halls" of the past and out to a corn roast at Elk Lake, where all the local Liberal candidates gathered.

The crowd failed to demolish the 5,000 ears of corn laid on for the occasion, but it ate up Dr. McGeer's prediction that the Liberal party would form the next government of B.C.

The Liberal leader in a post-roast speech said that "nowhere more than in southern Vancouver Island" was it evident that the Social Credit government had "failed to come up with the candidates" to win the election.

He said he wanted to bring a "new style of politics" to the province and to get away from the "stuffy old halls" that had characterized political meetings in the past in B.C.

Asking support for the "commonsense, middle-of-the-road young men" who are candidates in the four Greater Victoria ridings, Dr. McGeer said the Sacred "government ship is springing leaks all over the province — especially in the Interior and in the north of B.C."

"This ship is going down, and going down quickly," he said.

"We torpedoed it," came a shout from the crowd.

"No, it's just rusted," Dr. McGeer said.

Dr. McGeer said the government had not relied on its men from Greater Victoria for achievement. "Surely this must have been obvious" to the people, he said.

"I'm proud of these Liberal candidates, and I'll attack them up against candidates of any other party and of any other area of British Columbia."

Dr. McGeer added that even if they were not members of the Liberal Party, "I would still appeal to the people to support them as individuals on their own."

"They're that good," he said.

He said the Oak Bay seat, held in the last legislature by Liberal Allan Cox, was absolutely safe.

Dr. McGeer said the campaign in the ridings of Esquimalt, Victoria and Saanich-Islands, where candidates Fred Phillips, Ian Stewart and Mel Couveller, and Louis Lindholm are running, "has not yet reached its peak."

But the campaign has "started to catch fire," he said. "Yes, the people here can see it... it's no fairy tale... the government is going down."

Dr. McGeer said there were problems of overcrowding at schools here, a university that was "not finished," highways problems and pollution — "all because of the weakness of your local representation."

The Liberal Party, he said, wanted "to form a government of no special interest — no commitment to big business, no commitment to labor — only a commitment to the people."

Dr. McGeer said the people of B.C. "have got to lick the fear" that the Social Credit government was injecting by saying "you must vote for the government because we've got to keep out the NDP."

"We've got to abolish fear," he said, and "we've got to have the courage to vote for change."

Dr. McGeer earlier in the day met almost no response when his campaign bus stopped at Colwood shopping plaza. A light rain kept most of what people there were inside their parked cars when the Liberal leader spoke through a microphone from the back of a pickup truck.

The Liberal leader spent a group of hippie types in Centennial Square about 12:30 p.m. after he was interrupted by their heckling singing close by.

A small group, mostly Liberal supporters, grew into a gathering of about 100 people after one of the hippies asked Dr. McGeer, "What about the barrier between youth and older people?"

The youth said politicians were "always making promises" and never keeping them, and all politicians were the same.

"If that's your attitude, then you should be in politics yourself, showing us how it's done," Dr. McGeer argued.

When Dr. McGeer invited the youth to ask others standing away to enter the conversation, a young woman said, "I think old people should come to them."

A youth said he wanted the freedom to do what he liked, as long as he didn't hurt anyone else.

"You can't do that any more — that ended 100 years ago," an older man interjected.

When a youth insisted that young and older generations could not communicate, Louis Lindholm said: "I don't believe it." He asked them, "Would you like to canvass for me in Saanich?"

Some of the young people said they would like to canvass for him, and a party worker arranged to pick them up for the work.

Ensign 'Best Flag' For B.C.

B.C. Liberal leader Pat McGeer said in Victoria Tuesday he would like to see the Red Ensign replace B.C.'s "ham-and-eggs" provincial flag.

Approached by Red Ensign campaigner George Burnham at the Liberal corn roast Tuesday at Elk Lake, Dr. McGeer sympathized with Mr. Burnham and said: "I've never liked our provincial flag... and I think we should make the Red Ensign our provincial flag."

Mr. Burnham, a First World War veteran, has made it a personal project to have the act instating Canada's Maple Leaf flag repealed on the grounds that it is ultra vires of the British North America Act.

Dipping into an ice-cream cup, Dr. McGeer told Mr. Burnham, "There's nothing you and I can do about it," and then said "I think we should make it our provincial flag."

"I don't think we should have the ham-and-eggs flag we have now," Dr. McGeer said.

The Red Ensign, he said, meant much more to British Columbians than the provincial flag. Dr. McGeer said the flag was presented to B.C. when Premier Bennett "just flew to England, came back and unfurled the thing."

Dr. McGeer added that even if they were not members of the Liberal Party, "I would still appeal to the people to support them as individuals on their own."

"They're that good," he said.

He said the Oak Bay seat, held in the last legislature by Liberal Allan Cox, was absolutely safe.

Dr. McGeer said the campaign in the ridings of Esquimalt, Victoria and Saanich-Islands, where candidates Fred Phillips, Ian Stewart and Mel Couveller, and Louis Lindholm are running, "has not yet reached its peak."

Island Beauty at Sunset

And so, as our ship pulls away from the shore and the sun sinks slowly in the west, we bid farewell to pleasant Vancouver Island, with the thought that this picture might come straight from travelogue made famous by James A. Fitzpatrick—who used to own one of Gulf Islands. In fact, it's evening mood picture by Jim Ryan, aboard Queen of Esquimalt.

Esquimalt Warms Up

By NANCY BROWN

The three-way campaign in Esquimalt riding heated up Tuesday night when an audience of 150 turned out at Metehosin for an all-candidate meeting.

A farm newspaper and a question about name-calling were the sparks for a fiery exchange that featured NDP candidate Jim Gurst and Metehosin residents J. J. Zuback and Anna Ranns.

Mr. Zuback asked for candidate's opinions about "the name-calling sessions being indulged in by Premier Bennett," especially references to Liberal and NDP provincial leaders as "enemies of democracy" and to the NDP members as "Godless Socialists."

According to Liberal Fred Phillips, the premier "stands convicted out of his own mouth."

According to Social Credit incumbent Herbert Bruch the question should be addressed to the premier—because he knew nothing about it.

Mr. Gurst said the statements portrayed a panicky premier, by which time Mrs. Ranns had risen to her feet with a muttered: "I've had it up to here."

"What," she demanded, "do you think of Mr. Berger who said Mr. Bennett is an old decrepit bumbling man who is terrified?"

"BIGGER NAMES"

"If we're going to have name-calling, I am going to call bigger names than anyone has ever heard."

Turning on Mr. Gurst, she produced a Manitoba farm paper, which she said contained a statement by the new Manitoba NDP premier suggesting that farmers could force up the price of beef.

Mr. Gurst, who said he had been confronted earlier this week by Mrs. Ranns, produced his own copy of the paper, to the delight of the audience.

He said the premier's endorsement of the Manitoba Farmers' Union had no connection with the story about the possibility of farmers gaining a higher price for their products.

The debate appeared to end in a draw, and about an even score for the hecklers.

Earlier, Mr. Bruch had said the provincial government is looking to solve the pollution and sewage problem without putting homeowners to the expense of building trunk and sewer lines.

He said the government was investigating the installation of household wastes, with the unit to cost about $1,000 plus monthly operating costs of $5 or $6.

He refused to endorse a recent call by the Teachers' Federation for candidates to use a "bite out of the apple" sign if they endorsed the federation program for education.

"I'm not going to take a bite out of that apple," he said. "I've once offered an apple like that."

NO CONNECTION

In answer to another question, he said Mr. Bennett had not called an early election to precede any hearing of the Commonwealth Trust and Diversified Income cases.

Mr. Gurst outlined the NDP program, which he said featured public automobile insurance at lower costs, and gradual easing of the hospital, education and sewage costs from the homeowners' shoulders.

Programs would be paid for, he said, by increase and enforcement of Crown royalties on such natural resources as coal and timber.

'COMMONSENSE'

He said there would be a takeover of B.C. Telephone which over the last 15 years had sent $20,000,000 out of Canada.

Liberal candidate Fred Phillips said he wanted to bring some commonsense into government, and wanted to see education changes to help both the top and below-average student.

Man Remanded

Roger Lindal of no fixed address charged with assaulting a police officer will appear in provincial court Aug. 26. He pleaded not guilty at an earlier hearing, and was not remanded for plea as reported Tuesday.

Chief Reported Fairly Good

Oak Bay Police Chief John Green, 48, remains in fairly good condition in Royal Jubilee Hospital following a heart attack suffered when lawn bowling Friday.

Chief Green was practising for the Canadian singles championship. He was to have represented B.C. in the competition in Oak Bay next week.

City Senior Staff Awarded Raises

By PAT MURPHY

Senior staff members at City Hall were awarded a 12-per-cent raise in salary at a closed meeting Aug. 7, it was learned Tuesday.

The closed meeting of city council was held following an open meeting during which aldermen approved the $2,600,000 swimming pool and aquatic project for the northwest corner of Central Park.

Senior staff includes the city manager, the assistant city manager and heads of departments.

NO SECURITY

City officials said Tuesday that there was never any secrecy about the pay raise, although the news was never made public.

Although the increase was general, City Manager Dennis Young did not get the full 12 per cent. His salary was rounded off at $25,000 a year.

Department heads' salaries, under the new schedule, will range from just below $20,000, for those with long seniority, down to about $15,000.

It was pointed out Tuesday that senior staff had not had an increase for 21 months, although the remainder of the city workers had received two increases in that time totalling approximately 12 per cent.

It was also pointed out the increase was made after a four-month survey during which salary schedules from all over the province were studied. Victoria's rates, it was found, were slightly below those for cities of comparable size.

SALARY REVIEW

At least one alderman at the Aug. 7 meeting protested the increase. He said that 12 per cent was too big a bite for the taxpayers and that staff should be given 6 per cent this year and 6 next. He was voted down by other members of city council.

City staffers were reported Tuesday to be unhappy that city salaries had not come under review annually as had those of other municipalities and people holding similar posts in the provincial government.

It is quite likely that an annual review will be instituted in future years.

At the present time all branches of City Hall staff have settled, with the exception of the police department. In that case an arbitration board award is awaited.

OUTCOME IN DOUBT

"We don't yet know what the outcome of this is going to be. The boys are all of tender years," he said.

Fire department officials estimated destruction of the mill at $500,000. It employed 40 men. The loss was partially covered by insurance.

Matches Cause Of Fire?

Three boys aged 10, 11 and 12 have told Saanich police they were playing with matches around the sawdust bins at Van Isle Moulding and Millwork Mill before it burned down Saturday night.

The boys were brought forward by their parents after the father of one recognized the description of his son's bicycle that appeared in Tuesday morning's Colonist. He thought he also recognized the descriptions of the other two boys' bikes, and got in touch with their parents.

BOYS QUESTIONED

They brought the boys to the police station, where they were questioned by the youth detail. "The parents were most cooperative, though naturally they were terribly upset," said Saanich Inspector Harry Adams.

Insp. Adams said that when the boys were questioned they admitted playing with matches in the sawdust bin area, but thought any smouldering had been put out before they left.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: My mother is 83 years old. I have never lived anywhere but under her roof. I am 65 today, a dried-up raisin of a woman, all my chances for marriage long gone, all my hopes for a career shattered.

There isn't one thing you can say to help me, but perhaps you can say something to others whose lives are at a turning point — women who don't know whether to move out of the house, take that job in another city, or marry that man who says, "I'm tired of waiting. It's now or never." My life is what I made it —

Mother Keeps Talking

When they call, mother sits in and talks endlessly about things that happened 50 years ago to people we don't know.

When it comes to hindsight I have 20-20 vision. I know where I went wrong. I was severely neurotic or I would not have allowed my mother to dominate and suffocate me. I recall vividly every lost opportunity to set myself free. If youth knew what age could tell! Please Ann, print this. It might help somebody. — Life Wasted.

Human Agony Touching

Dear Maple: It's not possible to do this work and not be touched by the sadness and agony of humanity. But I resolved early to take the readers' problems seriously and not personally. There's an important distinction. People with trouble don't need someone to sit down and cry with them. They need a detached, objective observer to tell it like it is. And this I try to do.

Dear Ann: How does a secretary tell her boss that and I made it a hell. I cannot leave the house without telling Mother where I am going and when I'll be back. I must account to her for every penny I spend. ("It was papa's money, you know, and he left it all to me!") She has said that to me 1,000 times in the past 20 years. I have very few friends left.

Dear Friend: Age has told, and I hope youth will listen. Thanks for writing.

Dear Ann: A friendly ear is a tremendous comfort in time of trouble. Just having someone to talk to helps. I know. But how do you cope with all the problems that people heap on you? How do you keep from cracking up?

I saw you a few weeks ago when you addressed a national convention in Chicago and you look so buoyant and fresh — so untouched by it all. How do you keep your balance? — Maple Leaf.

his rotten cigars are smoking up her glasses, stinking up her clothing and making her sick to her stomach? This has been going on for nearly a year. It's gotten so bad that I turn green when I hear his buzzer ring.

Don't tell me to come straight out with it. I can't. My husband is a junior executive with this firm. Please Ann, hurry your answer. I'm turning green again. — Gassed.

Dear Gassed: You aren't going to change the man so you'd better change jobs. And the sooner the better.

Panty-Hose: That's All

TORONTO (CP) — In the three years or so that pantyhose have come on the market, many stylish women have happily abandoned stockings at 50 cents a pair and adopted the $2 sheer long johns.

Now retailers are saying: Panty sales are declining almost as rapidly as pantyhose sales are rising.

Sam Fleming, buyer for a department store, says one-piece now account for between 50 and 60 per cent of his nylon and pantyhose volume. The biggest action is in $2 versions with sheer, suntan-colored legs. His advice if you want the best is to buy the sheer-looking but still long-lasting no-run. It's true they can still be pulled into holes, but they don't ladder.

Tearful Polanski Tells of Love

LOS ANGELES — Roman Polanski fought back tears Tuesday to tell newsmen of his brief but "truly happy" life with Sharon Tate — and of some of the things he has told police about circumstances surrounding her death.

There was no party at their home the night she and four other persons were slain.

She had no premonition of death. When he spoke to her by telephone from London a few hours before the tragedy occurred, she talked of trivialities: his birthday party, feeding a homeless kitten.

Although Voltyek Frolowsky and Jay Sebring, two of the five victims, smoked marijuana, "Sharon didn't use drugs, she didn't touch alcohol, she didn't even smoke cigarettes."

He knew few of the people who were guests in his home while he was in Europe, but that one was a man thrown out of his house earlier for making a disturbance during a housewarming party.

He wouldn't name the man thrown out of his home, nor would another Polanski associate who is a closely guarded police informer on the case. The man was believed to be a suspect in the still mysterious multiple murder.

Polanski called the press conference, cancelled it then called it again. He finally appeared before newsmen, against the advice of his agents and attorney, because, he said:

"In this case it is not my reputation, it is the reputation of the one person who loved me — and whose name has been all over the papers. "They (the writers) are curious about my relationship with Sharon within the last few months as well as within the last few years I spent with her."

He paused, swallowed, then continued: "They were the only time of true happiness in my life."

Polanski who is 5 foot 4, stood for the 15-minute talk.

He wore a double-breasted, blue-gray charcoal suit, his long hair lapping over its collar.

He spoke slowly, choosing his words carefully in a foreign language — he is French born, reared in Poland — and pausing often to brush tears back from his eyes.

Fifty newsmen gathered at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel for the first public statement made by the film director since the murder of his wife.

He sketched brief word pictures of his wife, Frolowsky and Sebring, who died with Abigail Folger and 18-year-old Steven Parent, a friend of the caretaker of the Tate-Polanski estate, early Aug. 9.

Of his wife, one of the stars of Valley of the Dolls, he said:

"All of you know how beautiful she was. She was one of the most beautiful women — if not the most beautiful woman — in the world. But few of you know how good she was. She was vulnerable. She couldn't refuse any friendship."

Of Frolowsky, a Polish emigre said by friends to have been a user of hard narcotics, he said:

"He was a man I knew from Poland for a very long time. A very kind human being, who wanted success — but who had little talent. He and Abigail Folger came to Los Angeles a year ago."

Of Sebring, the Hollywood hair stylist who once had been his wife's fiancé:

"Jay Sebring was our close friend. Sometimes he came without calling before. He'd just sit down and drink a beer."

Polanski said that there were six glasses in the home

after the murder, indicating that there may have been a few friends who came to the house — but not a party.

(A coroner's report said that analysis of the victims' blood indicated a moderate amount of alcohol had been imbibed; tests to determine if drugs had been used are still under way.)

The last time I talked to her was a few hours before the tragedy occurred. She wanted to know if I wanted a birthday party. I said, 'Yes, let's hold one.'

"She said a little kitten had come in from the hills and she was trying to feed it with an eye dropper. There was no indication of a party that evening. There wasn't any party that evening."

He said he had been back to the home and told newsmen what they'd find there:

"You can go see this 'orgy place,'" he said, apparently referring to accounts he said the foreign press had written of activities at the home.

"You can see books on natural childbirth. You'll see the room she was painting. . . the samples of wallpaper she complained you had to wait so hard to get . . ."

He paused, fought for control, then continued:

"You'll see a lot of blood. All over the place. And baby clothes. That's all."

Polanski's attorney had warned newsmen Polanski would not answer any questions. After he finished his statement, he was ushered to a waiting limousine. He sat in the back, shuddering, his hands to his face, until the car drove away.

Perseverance Often Pays For Women

By JEAN SHARP

TORONTO (CP) — Every year women's groups present governments with requests for action on assorted issues. Sometimes several ask for action on the same issue, year after year.

The presentation has almost a ritual quality.

It begins with the submission to the relevant government of a brief outlining that year's requests, carefully documented and approved by the club membership. With it goes a pious hope that it will be read before the next step is taken.

That step is a club delegation meeting with the government leader and cabinet ministers. The brief is read aloud by a delegate and the appropriate ministers then comment. There is an exchange of amenities, perhaps a photograph is taken. Then, say a sampling of club women, there is usually a long pause.

Effort Worth Making

because there may be results in the long run. There is nonetheless a wry note in their comments about it all.

Margaret Hyndman is a lawyer and past international and national president of Professional Women's Clubs. She is skeptical.

One of her causes has been to get equal-pay legislation for women. She says repeated pressure may have helped get some laws on the books, but that they are not as strong as asked.

"What it reduces itself to is how many voters are involved."

"On different occasions we have been told we have had much more effect than we realized, but I haven't seen much evidence of it."

If they would give you a fight, on the merits of a question there would be some point in it, but they are so polite and disinterested."

Publicity Helpful

Miss Hyndman says the publicity that comes with a presentation may be helpful in shaping public opinion.

Margaret Ashdown, current

R and P president, says she thinks submissions do get results, but agrees they are not necessarily in the form asked for.

"We've been well received on every occasion. This doesn't mean a darn thing, but it's comforting."

"We did track back one series of requests on estate

Something in Long Run

"I think you do get something in the long run, but I think you only get it if your requests are reasonably based and properly stated. You have to have a strong conviction, a properly documented case to present and see that it gets to the right people. Then, if you keep hammering away, something gets done. But that's a very long view."

"We have seen some improvements in what you might call the general status of women. The Canadian bill of rights is something we'd worked on for a long time."

Pressure on Pressure

"If you can add pressure on pressure, you may get some place. Things will happen.

You just go back next year and ask again."

A list of some of the requests made in the last 50 years is an indicator of how

In 1917, the National Council of Women was seeking

"better care of the feeble-minded," suitable films for children, standardization of canned goods.

In both the 1920s and 1930s they submitted briefs on the status of women.

A Lovelier You

Hold Head Erect

By MARY SUE MILLER

If you want to look as young as you are, see to it that you are never burdened with a globule of fat on the nape of your neck.

Let's learn how to lighten the load. You take a step in the right direction when you always hold your head erect,

with your chin upward from the floor. The lifted pose helps both to overcome and prevent the problem.

If the difficulty is well entrenched, however, you must add these reducing routines.

● Stand erect, chin up and arms down at sides.

Stiffen elbows and make loose fists. Leading with fists, swing arms up and back. Then break wrists so that fists drop toward floor and hold for five counts. Return to starting position and repeat 15 times.

You do it right when upper back muscles tense.

● Lie face down on floor and rest head on backs of hands. Keeping hands against forehead, slowly raise head up and back as far as possible;

simultaneously, inch elbows backward and as if to make them touch. Relax and repeat

15 times, working for smoothest, slowest kind of movement.

Diligent performance brings about a youthful line. And that is worth the effort!

Ulster Brochure Offers 'Shooting Holidays'

DUBLIN (Reuters) — Embarrassment abounded Tuesday at the Northern Irish tourist office in the capital of the Irish Republic when a new brochure arrived from Belfast suggesting Ulster is the place for a "shooting holiday."

The pamphlet, extolling the virtues of hunting in strif-tom Ulster, declared:

"It is with the greatest pleasure and satisfaction that the tourist board is able to introduce shooting holidays in Ulster."

"We are able to make available to visitors with a love for gun sports one of the recreational activities which is such a feature of country life in this part of the world."

In Belfast, a spokesman for the Northern Ireland tourist board said the brochure will not be withdrawn.

"Why should it be? Ulster is still gay, still sunny, still an ideal place for a holiday."

"Sure we have had troubles in the last few days. The whole world knows that. But these troubles were in isolated spots."

King Fisherman-Boy, Star Win at Derby

A 411-pound tyee caught by eight-year-old Michael Lange of Campbell River took the sixth annual Campbell River Courier salmon derby Sunday.

He played the fish for more than half an hour before landing it with an assist from his father. He won a 12-foot aluminum boat, and a salmon rod and reel outfit as part of the prize.

A surprise contestant was movie star John Wayne, who won a prize for professionally guided anglers with a 10-pound spring chinook.

Meanwhile the department of fisheries said Tuesday that Indian Arm above boundary at Wigwam Creek has been closed to sport fishing and Gold River and Burman River will be closed to sport fishing effective at midnight Aug. 24.

Ulster Gets Rights Declaration

LONDON (Reuters) — Britain and Northern Ireland Tuesday night published a declaration of rights for the citizens of the troubled country.

Briefly the seven points were:

- Partition of Ireland is not an issue.
- Northern Ireland's affairs are an internal matter and Britain will assert this in overseas forums.
- The British government has ultimate responsibility for the protection of those who live in Northern Ireland when law and order breaks down. Troops will be withdrawn when law and order has been restored.

- The commitment of troops, in line with Britain's ultimate responsibility, means that British views must be regarded. The Northern Ireland government has reaffirmed that it will take into account the views of the British government, especially on the status of citizens there and their equal rights and protection under the law.
- Britain welcomes reforms on local government voting, housing allocations, and the appointment of an ombudsman and both governments agree it is vital to maintain the momentum of internal reform.

- Both governments reaffirmed that every citizen in Northern Ireland is entitled to the same equality of treatment and freedom from discrimination as in the rest of Britain regardless of political views or religion.

- Both governments are determined to take all possible steps to restore normality to the Northern Ireland community so that economic developments can be quickened.

Guyana and Surinam Battling on Border

GEORGETOWN, Guyana (CP-Reuters) — Guyana and neighbouring Surinam were reported sending reinforcements to a disputed border area Tuesday following an outbreak of fighting in which an air strip changed hands.

The Guyanese government said its troops drove off a Surinam force and seized a Surinam air strip and camp.

Sources here said Guyanese reinforcements are being flown to the territory, a 6,000-square-mile triangle-shaped piece of land that has been in dispute for four years.

Prime Minister Forbes Burnham said protests over the fighting, which followed by 10 days Surinam encroachment of the territory, have been sent to Surinam and The Netherlands, which controls the former colony's defence and foreign policy.

In the Hague, the Dutch news agency said in a dispatch from Surinam that an airlift of heavy-armed military police was being prepared.

Bodies, Snakes and Martial Law*Camille Death Toll Rising to 1,000?

GULFPORT, Miss. (AP) — Limited martial law was clamped on Mississippi's storm-ravaged coastal strip Tuesday and Gov. John Bell Williams said Hurricane Camille's death toll may soar far higher than first feared.

"Because of the fact that bodies are now being found regularly, some people estimate the death rate could go up above 500 and possibly reach 1,000," he said.

The storm's death toll stood at 170. The governor said the highway patrol counted 162 killed along Mississippi's coast. Louisiana counted eight dead in flat Plaquemines Parish (county), hit by raging tides that left its bottom half under deep water.

Under the martial law proclamation, chiefs of the National Guard and highway patrol exercise joint responsibility in supervising the area.

The first step, said Williams, was to quarantine the area and limit the flow of people—particularly nightseers.

President Nixon declared Louisiana a major disaster area and allocated $1,000,000 in federal disaster funds—the same amount he ordered for Mississippi—to aid in relief and repairs.

The president said he was sending Vice-President Spiro Agnew and George Romney, his secretary of housing and urban development, to New Orleans today to inspect the stricken areas on a helicopter tour.

TOLL MOUNTS

The death toll jumped Tuesday with the discovery of 23 bodies in a luxury-apartment project at nearby Pass Christian and the announcement by authorities in Plaquemines Parish that they knew of eight dead in the area.

The storm's 190-mile-an-hour winds hit the Louisiana tip before turning north in the gulf Sunday night and slamming into the Mississippi coast. Plaquemines officials said the exact number dead there may never be known.

Mississippi state Senator Nap Cassibry, the Civil Defence coordinator for the gulf coast, said he expects the final toll from the storm will be between 150 and 200.

DOWN TO SQUALL

He estimated that damages to coastal military and government installations alone would reach $500,000,000.

Meanwhile, Camille blew itself out as a rain squall over Tennessee and the mountains of eastern Kentucky.

Mayor Philip Shaw of Gulfport said most of the damage here was along the beach but it had been evacuated before the storm for the higher ground of the city. There were 22 bodies in one funeral home and nine in another, Shaw said, "and there might be a few more when clearing is completed."

GRIM NOTE

Another grim aspect of the storm occurred at an airport on Lake Pontchartrain in New Orleans when a light plane carrying four men and medical supplies for the stricken gulf coast crashed and burned Tuesday. All four persons aboard were killed.

The destruction reaped by Camille, one of the most intense storms ever to hit the North American mainland, lay along a 50-mile stretch of beach from Waveland, Miss., to Pascagoula, near the Alabama state line.

At Pascagoula, a major ship-building point, the problem of snakes added to the miseries of those left homeless.

"We had to organize to fight them," said state Senator Merle Palmer of Pascagoula. He said snakes blown in by the storm's winds had moved to the city's higher ridges.

Pass Christian, Bay St. Louis and Waveland, all smaller towns west of Gulfport on the way to New Orleans, were all but destroyed.

Food, medical supplies and even water were being shipped in to the coast from many points. An airlift from Atlanta, Ga., was scheduled to bring in 375,000 pounds of food and New Orleans shipped 13,000 gallons of water by rail.

HAVANA (AP) — Hurricane Camille destroyed 102 residence units and damaged more than 100 others in western Cuba, government officials said Tuesday.

Three deaths have been reported in the storm that smacked the tip of Cuba on Friday night. There have been no reports on crop losses.

Typhoid shots are being given 10,000 people in the area swept by the hurricane.

Anglicans Challenged

SUDBURY, Ont. (CP) — The primate of the Anglican Church of Canada has challenged opponents of union with the United Church to suggest an alternative.

Most Rev. Howard H. Clark told the church's general synod Tuesday that Christians cannot recommend political brotherhood if they cherish their own forms of separatism.

"For the church, as for the world, the chance of world community has opened up. Yet there are Anglicans who re-proach the general synod for its efforts to achieve union with the United Church.

"There are those whose mind seems to be made up so that they will not even discuss the possibility of Anglican-United union. They have the right to be heard. But we may justly ask them what is their alternative to the present procedures."

The slow process of accommodation between the two churches now is at the stage of considering intercommunion certain in special circumstances. A general commission on union composed of 20 representatives from each church has met since 1967 and is to prepare a plan of union by 1972.

This general synod will be asked to consider a resolution that bishops may give permission for Anglican-United Church communion on special occasions when services are held to promote unity.

Another resolution would empower Anglican committees to enter joint programs with the United Church in such fields as stewardship and finance, evangelism and social action, a joint board of missions, Christian education, church extension, theological education, church publications and clerical salary policy.

MIAMI (UPI)—U.S. weather officials said Tuesday Hurricane Debbie might still strike the U.S.

The storm, with winds of up to 110 miles an hour, was about 500 miles northeast of Puerto Rico and heading slowly in a westerly direction. A massive chemical assault by weather scientists was having no success.

Boat-Sinking Probe Ordered

PARIS (UPI)—French authorities Tuesday ordered a judicial inquiry into the sinking of a Lake Geneva pleasure launch, in which 14 children and eight adults died.

Officials said the vessel Fra-diou was declared satisfactory after an inspection last Saturday. They said holiday-camp rules might have to be tightened as 19 boys under similar holiday-camp supervision drowned last month.

All Quiet On Moon

HOUSTON (UPI) — A little moonquake meter set up by Apollo 11's astronauts at their Tranquility base survived the frigid lunar night and came back to life Tuesday on command from mission control.

The meter's first reports were that the moon was quiet, a Space Centre spokesman said.

'Protest' Rocks Guards

Colonist Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — How far can student "protest" go?

Right into the very heart of the establishment? Into the Canadian Guards? Into the show-window ceremonial of the department of national defence, the changing of the guard on Parliament Hill?

Better believe it, for sad to say, it's happened.

The Guards, three platoons of red-jacketed, bearskin-hatted officers and men and a 60-piece regimental band, perform the colorful changing ceremony every summer morning at 10 o'clock before a gallery of tourists, mostly Americans, from the last week in June through the first week of September.

But with integration, unification and the "jolly green jumper" of a tri-service uniform, but most of all because of defence cut-backs, the Guards last winter came on hard times.

They have a date with the executioner, and while the regiment which has served in Cyprus waits its extinction, manpower runs thin.

To fill the gaps in the ranks, students from Ottawa universities and Montreal colleges and high schools were enlisted.

For them it was a summer job, strictly.

They'd parade to Parliament Hill for the Guard changing, and for this they'd get $975 plus room and board. They'd work a schedule of eight days "on" and three and a half days "off."

Two of every three Guardsmen were students.

And then it happened.

A hard-core few, less than a dozen, couldn't hack the discipline.

These were student activists from Montreal's high schools and the riot-ridden Sir George Williams University.

Bearskins—No Plumes

But it was rather a "chicken-type" protest.

They didn't wear the feathered plumes on the big black bearskins.

Now they're being formally "put on charge" and will get a real taste of discipline.

The "protest" began three days ago, going undetected until Monday.

But it sure has shaken defence headquarters and the once-proud Guards.

"We treated them like men, like soldiers," says Captain F. S. Gagnon who was in command while Col. Weinert was on special duty at Camp

Petawawa, the Guards' home base.

"That's where we made our mistake," lamented the captain. "They aren't men, not even young men. They're immature kids. They joined us to do a reasonably well-paid job and we expected them to perform as honorably and well as the others who have been absolutely first class."

Because the absence of plumes on the bearskins not only was known but understood for the very good reason that the clasps temporarily were out of unit stock.

So none of the officers counted unplumed bearskins.

Not, that is, until Monday morning, when as the Guards marched onto the Hill they were asked about the "protest."

'Mutiny' Confirmed

They were unbelieving. It couldn't have happened, they insisted. Never in the Guards. But they would check.

They did. And to their horror they confirmed it was mutiny.

Now everyone in the national capital's enormous military establishment is bravely trying to laugh it off, but it hurts.

Chuckling, Gen. Bourgeois tried brushing the whole thing off with the remark it was little more than "a schoolboy storm in a teacup."

But it's not all that funny.

For the defence department was giving these students good solid military training which would make them eligible when they get their university degrees, for commissioning as officers.

Now it's just another dream. What bothers the national capital is that the "mutiny" could mean the end of this finest of summer festivals, the changing of the Guard which has been drawing an annual average of 750,000 tourists to Parliament Hill ever since former Conservative defence minister George Peckford initially presented the half-hour daily military pageant back in 1957.

Sad to think that student "protest" may have put it in peril — and that next summer Parliament Hill won't be hearing 60 of the nation's finest handmen sounding those slow and gutsy British army marches. Thin Red Line, Standard of Saint George, Voice of the Guns and other great "tunes of glory."

Boards Yacht with Pretty Brunette

Trudeau Cruising Mediterranean

MENTON, France (UPI) — Canadian Prime minister Trudeau slipped unobtrusively into France Tuesday morning, flew to the glamorous Riviera, and immediately boarded a yacht in the company of an unidentified pretty brunette for a Mediterranean cruise.

With the help of French security officials, Trudeau eluded newsmen and press photographers who tried to keep up with his whirlwind passage from Paris to Nice and finally to this tiny port near the French-Italian border.

Polite but firm security agents even prevented the deputy mayor of Menton from boarding the yacht Adanac when he tried to present the vacationing Canadian leader a traditional Riviera welcoming gift of flowers and brandy-soaked fruit.

Trudeau later got off the 88-foot, 100-ton yacht barefoot and dressed as a sailor, to speak to the deputy mayor, explaining that he was travelling unofficially and neither wanted nor expected any welcoming ceremony.

He told the deputy mayor he would like to visit Menton again, especially the town hall decorated by Jean Cocteau.

The yacht, which was flying a Panamanian flag, is registered in the name of Mrs. Lucienne Wilson, a wealthy 69-year-old Canadian woman who lives in nearby Monte Carlo. When telephoned, Mrs. Wilson refused to answer any questions, saying "I don't have to make any statements."

Wilson 'Cools' Ulster

• Ulster border areas bristle with troops. Page 8

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Wilson announced Thursday night that the British military commander in Northern Ireland will take control of all security forces there including Ulster's controversial B-Special police.

Forces 'Tight Squeeze'

OTTAWA (CP) — Gen. Jean Victor Allard, retiring chief of the defence staff, says Canada will find it a tight squeeze to fill its foreign and domestic military commitments with armed forces strength of 80,000 or so.

In an interview Tuesday, the plain-spoken general said he understands the need for government-imposed restraint on defence expenditures.

On another point, he said it is "sheer hypocrisy" to advocate that Canada should get out of its present nuclear role while accepting the protection afforded by the West's nuclear deterrent.

He stressed that this is a personal opinion. Four of Canada's six bomber

Wilson made the announcement in a television broadcast before returning to 10 Downing Street to wind up more than five hours of talks with the Ulster premier, Maj. James Chichester-Clark.

The British leader said the two sides had agreed on a joint declaration which lays the basis for the whole future relationship between the two governments and guarantees progress in resolving North Ireland's civil rights questions that exploded into religious rioting last week.

FULL RESPONSIBILITY

"The most important thing is that the GOC (General Officer Commanding) commanding British troops will now take over full responsibility for security in Northern Ireland," he said.

"He will have responsibility for the operation of the Royal Ulster Constabulary, including the special constabulary (B-Specials)."

SPECIALS BLAMED

The Roman Catholic minority in Ulster calls the Protestant-based B-Specials trigger-happy and blames them for much of the violence in last week's rioting, including machine-gun barrages on Roman Catholic homes.

Roman Catholics in Ulster and the independent Irish Republic to the south have demanded that the B-Specials, a part-time police force of 8,000 men, be disbanded. But the Ulster government refused.

Wilson stressed that "the question of partition is not involved."

END SOUGHT

The Roman Catholic-dominated Irish Republic to the south has favored an end to the 1920 partition that separated it from the Protestant North under British rule. Chichester-Clark blamed much of the trouble of the last week on agitation for an end to partition.

Wilson said the civil rights reforms demanded by the Roman Catholic minority in Ulster in jobs, housing and voting rights will be speeded up.

EQUALITY PROMISED

All citizens of Northern Ireland, he said, "irrespective of their political or religious views will have the same rights of freedom against discrimination as all other citizens of the United Kingdom."

Wilson also announced: "We have reached agreement on the main principles and on a declaration which will govern the relations between the two governments and our handling of the problem in the coming months."

Troops Club Czechs

PRAGUE (AP) — Without waiting for demonstrations, riot troops tear gassed and clubbed downtown crowds here Tuesday night on the anniversary eve of the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Hours earlier, Communist party chief Gustav Husak endorsed the Aug. 20-21, 1968, invasion and warned against anniversary agitation.

Underground groups have called for a "national day of shame" to mark the anniversary of the invasion that shattered the liberal movement introduced and nurtured by former party chief Alexander Dubcek.

More than a dozen armored personnel carriers and water cannon roiled into Wenceslas

Grounds Lacking In Attack

Square as evening rush-hour crowds lined the sidewalks staring sullenly at the national Museum and the statue of St. Wenceslas, symbols of protest in the last year against Soviet occupation.

After warning the crowd several times to go home, riot police attacked with truncheons. During twilight and after dark they fired three barrages of tear-gas canisters into the square.

Clouds of tear gas sent hundreds of Czechoslovaks and tourists racing in near panic away from the square.

Wrong Man Serves Five-Day Jail Term

TORONTO (CP) — A Windsor man who cannot drive and has never owned a car spent five days in Don Jail on a charge of non-payment of a parking ticket.

He was jailed because his name was John Bennett, the same name as a person wanted since 1968 for not paying the parking ticket.

Police Chief James Mackey admitted the mistake Tuesday.

"It appears that the police erred and jailed the wrong man," he said.

John Bennett of Windsor was arrested and charged with being a drunk July 31 when he arrived at Toronto by train.

After receiving a suspended sentence police sent him to Don Jail, claiming they had a warrant from 1968 ordering him to jail for five days for failing to pay a traffic fine.

SEX Banned from Highway

VANCOUVER (CP) — SEX has been banned from British Columbia's highways.

So have RYE, GIN, RUM and ALE.

And there will be no PIGS, RATS, or COWS driving around.

All have been eliminated by the province's motor vehicles branch from use on licence plates under the three-letter, three-number system, to be introduced in 1970.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson said Monday offensive letter combinations are being screened by the branch, which has been in touch with provinces and states in the United States using the letters system.

"To start with we will use only the letters A to K, excluding I because of its similarity to the number one," Mr. Peterson said.

"This removes, for the moment, the problem of words formed by letters coming later in the alphabet."

Giant-Killing Job Faces Two in Esquimalt

By CLEMENT CHAPPLIE

Two of the three men hoping to take Esquimalt constituency in the Aug. 27 election will have to be giant killers to succeed.

The two would-be giant-killers are NDPer Jim Gorst, who a year and a half ago was Esquimalt Liberal Association president, and Liberal Fred Phillips, a Langford resident of one and a half years, manager of the CFB Esquimalt Savings Credit Union.

The third man, Social Credit Herbert Bruch, is the giant. Mr. Bruch is fighting his sixth election in Esquimalt and according to the long-term figures, his popularity is increasing.

Mr. Bruch's lowest point in popularity came in 1960 when he won only 40 per cent of the votes, yet still beat the closest man to him (OCPer Geoff Mitchell) by a comfortable 1046 votes.

In 1963 he increased his percentage to 68 and in 1966 he walked away with 53 per cent.

One of Mr. Bruch's recurring election planks is that, if elected, he will be a full-time member of the B.C. Legislature. Except for one six-month period in the early 1950s, he has had no job outside that provided by his legislative duties, he says.

He has, however, been national president of the Social Credit party for a number of years, and spends much of his time doing work for the Social Credit "team" all over B.C.

Although he speaks in terms of the province when he says the government party is being "threatened" at this election, he voices no fear for his own riding.

Although he dislikes the term "party organizer," his party work is generally conceded to stand him in good stead when it comes to election time. He calls his campaign "low-key," says the 1966 campaign cost only $720, and that this one will cost about the same.

Personally, he is working no harder in this than in any other campaign, but he says there are more volunteers and offers of help than last time. "I've tried to avoid a machine or organization," Mr. Bruch says.

James Gorst, a former taxi driver who now owns half a cab firm, seems to want to beat Mr. Bruch at his own game by promising to be a full-time parliamentarian. He has switched party lines while trying. He was for a brief period the Liberal candidate

Fishermen Consider Arrest Plan

NANAIMO An independent Wellington fisherman is considering the possibility of making a citizen's arrest of Russians who fish within the 12-mile limit off Vancouver Island.

He is Jack Angell who says that most of the fishermen who work in the waters are with him.

Mr. Angell said Tuesday that he would be contacting NDP leader T. C. Douglas to find out what the legal implications of such an action would be.

Asked if their ships were fast enough, Mr. Angell said: "We'd circle the ship, and then close in and board it."

Mr. Angell said they would have to have the support of the fisheries department and the RCMP.

Mr. Angell said the Russians fish at night. He had seen them inside the line many times.

"If fisheries aren't going to do anything then the little fisherman will have to do what he can. I hope this brings things to a head."

NO HEROES
Mr. Angell said they were not looking for unarmed heroes, but were trying to find solutions.

"We have taken in off-shore rights to the continental shelf. These are only forerunners of things to come," he said, referring to the alleged Russian fishing activities.

"This will be felt all over the Pacific for years to come. If you deplete stocks offshore, what are you going to get in shore? It would be all right if they just took a quota but they fish 365 days a year."

"Soon it will be all gone."

PERU'S LIMIT
"If we got inside their limit, I'm sure we'd be hauled right in."

Mr. Angell pointed out that Peru, which wasn't even a world power, had claimed a 200-mile limit.

"They're getting these fish and who is paying for it? Each and everyone of us is going to pay. Confiscate their nets and fish... this would hurt them. Why wasn't this done?"

"MY BIT"
"In going to do my bit and whatever the repercussions are, I'll face them. It's much easier to sit idly by because then you don't get into trouble. I am going to talk to Mr. Douglas tomorrow (Wednesday) and I hope that he can get some action."

"But the fellows who want to do something will have their chance — if nothing is done."

OIL WORRY
Mr. Angell also complained about thousands of gallons of oil which was being spilled by the Russian fleet. He said the oil was ending up on Tofino and Long Beach areas.

"That oil is definitely hurting the plankton and surface fish. The fisheries just aren't interested."

Logger's Death 'Accident'

PORT ALBERNI — An accidental death verdict was returned by a Port Alberni jury Monday during an inquest for a Victoria logger who died Aug. 1 at a logging operation about 40 miles south of Port Alberni.

The jury was told that James Maurice Morino, 24, of 103 Pine, Victoria, had been operating a heavy construction logging tractor without permission.

Witnesses said that the regular operator had left the tractor parked on the road while he went to inspect some logs. Mr. Morino climbed into the driver's seat and went up the road, towing a load of logs.

It was stated that he made it to the top of a hill but on the way down, he lost control of the tractor when it speeded up. It started to bounce, flipped and crushed Mr. Morino.

The jury was told that death was practically instantaneous.

Jaycee Sponsorship

Four Candidates Draw 450 At Duncan Election Forum

DUNCAN — About 450 local residents went to Cowichan senior secondary school Tuesday for a second all-candidates' forum in the Cowichan-Malahat provincial election campaign.

The meeting was sponsored by Duncan Jaycees.

IWA local 1-80 will sponsor a third forum Thursday evening at the Native Sons Hall at Ladysmith.

Liberal candidate Jim Bigsby criticized Premier Bennett whom, he said, had been campaigning in a chauffeur-driven Cadillac "paid for by you and me."

TAX DOLLARS
"The government is spending half-a-million tax dollars on advertising in papers and on radio."

"This election is going to be a test of courage for you. Mr. Bennett is trying to drive voters

Son Rene watches Mr. Angell filleting fish for canning before him like sheep. He's appealing to your fear, not your commonsense."

Mr. Bigsby said the government was not looking to the future and had not prepared for the changes that must occur in the economy.

NEXT ELECTION
He also stated that the deciding election was not the forthcoming one but the next one.

"One party is on the way out and two others are going in," he said.

"In this election, it is a battle between the NDP and Liberals on who is going to unseat which."

"This has been an unusual campaign in many ways," said NDP candidate Robert Strachan.

"As I said last Friday, I expected to hear the premier blame Tom Berger for the riots in Northern Ireland."

"At the beginning, one opponent said I had been an outstanding MLA and recently referred to me as a statesman. A politician thinks of the next election and a statesman thinks of the next generation. That's where the government today has let us down badly. It always thinks of the next election and not the next generation."

Mr. Strachan stated that he had earlier proposed pollution control in legislation. "It is not something I just discovered at election time," he said. "Only now the government is taking your tax money and advertising pollution control."

"This election is a time of bumper stickers," said Social Credit candidate Dr. Charles Enns. "Socialists in England are also wearing bumper stickers and they read: 'Please come back Guy Fawkes. All is forgiven.'"

Dr. Enns said he was wired Premier Bennett recommending that the appointment of an ombudsman be a priority issue in the next session of the legislature.

"As government gets bigger and departments more complex the average citizen has increasing difficulty getting his case heard. Alberta already has one and Manitoba is about to get one. All reports from Alberta indicate that the ombudsman there is very successful in representing the voice of the people."

SUGGESTION BOOED
Dr. Enns said there were many outstanding British Columbians who could act as ombudsmen. When he suggested P. A. Gagliardi, he was booed. Then he mentioned Mr. Strachan, former leader of the opposition, and the audience burst into applause.

"What would happen if you vote for a Social Credit candidate and get an NDP government?" asked independent candidate Ken Hasanen.

"Make whoever gets in as your MLA work but the thing to do is make them scramble to get your vote back by voting non-partisan and then you will get all the promises fulfilled from the Liberals, Social Credits and NDP."

LAND CONTROL
Mr. Hasanen said there should be more control over land under the ownership and control of large companies such as the CPR, Industrial Telephone and Telegraph, Mac Millan and Bloedel, Noranda and Crown Zellerbach.

"I would like to see this so it can be put to multiple use," he said. "The best way is to give the department of recreation and conservation more control over these areas."

Robert Strachan who spent a day in Cumberland and from Tom Barnett, Comox-Alberni MP, who is in the north Island area this week.

Premier Bennett is expected to visit Courtenay city hall where he will sign the guest register and attend a coffee party at Socred headquarters on Cliffe Avenue.

A Socred rally will be held in Cumberland Masonic Hall tonight at 8 p.m.

Kuper Islanders Angry Over Poll

KUPER ISLAND — Many Kuper Island residents are angry because the only way they will be able to vote at their usual polling station is to vote in the advance poll as if they were going to be absent on election day.

"We have had a polling station on Kuper Island for years," said Mrs. Audrey Ginn, a resident of the island. "This year everybody is having to vote all over the place."

Even members of the same family living under the same roof are voting at different places. Some are voting at Chemainus, some at Kuper Island, and some at Tofino.

The only way some people are going to be able to vote on Kuper Island is to vote as an absentee voter.

"We want to find out what and why it is happening," she said. "Someone is very incompetent somewhere down the line. What I am mainly concerned about is if it is happening in a small area like ours what is happening to other areas throughout B.C.? Many people are not going to leave their home-town to vote and therefore there is not going to be a vote cast."

"When areas were being enumerated Kuper Island was overlooked," said Robert Strachan, NDP candidate.

"When I was contacted and

Owners Seek Ottawa Advice

PORT ALBERNI — Delegates representing every mobile home court in Port Alberni met Sunday to discuss problems and disagreements which have arisen from the levying of an "occupancy fee" on owners of mobile homes by the city.

Gerry Wright, spokesman for Port Alberni Mobile Home Owners Association, said the executive had been given authorization to contact a solicitor over what the members feel is discrimination.

"We have not yet had a reply from the department of justice in Ottawa, to whom we wrote some weeks ago, but we feel this is perhaps a hopeful sign," Mr. Wright said. "If they could give us no advice they would probably have written at once to say so. However, the lapse of time, we hope, may indicate that some investigation of the problem from the legal viewpoint is going on."

VALIDITY QUESTIONED
Mr. Wright said the mobile-home owners had asked the justice department to check on the justification and validity of the city's bylaw, which he said "charges a fee for people to occupy their own homes."

"It was also definitely confirmed at Sunday's meeting that we want to pay taxes... but we want to pay them on an equal footing and on the same formula as other homeowners. We are not trying to get out of paying taxes, we just want to be put in our proper position in the tax field," said Mr. Wright.

HELLYER'S VIEW
Mr. Wright referred to a statement by former housing minister Paul Hellyer which stated there was a definite place for mobile homes in solving the housing crisis.

"We appreciate the difficulty that is being experienced in raising school taxes, but this money is not going to education but only into general city funds," said Mr. Wright.

"The amount raised means a lot to us, but little to the city. However if we could be placed on regular tax rolls, and the provincial government contributed for us as it does for other homeowners, costs would be no more and probably less to us and the city would get much more out of it."

"CLOSED MINDS"
Mr. Wright said he was disappointed at a recent meeting with city council.

"What we contribute to the life of the community is apparently not taken into consideration. Last time, I feel we met closed minds, and indeed, absolute prejudice. We were even told we are subsidized by other people."

"We pay taxes through our rental fees, just like the people who rent apartments," Mr. Wright emphasized. "Only recently, in my trailer space rental went up again, because water rates in the city went up. We pay for all city improvements through increases in our rent."

At the moment mobile home owners are not quite sure of their status. Most received 24 hours notice to vacate when they refused to pay the occupancy fee, however most operators finally accepted the rent at least for a period.

Mr. Wright said they were told at their last meeting with council that the city assessors would be around to estimate the size of each trailer as the monthly occupancy fee, ranging from $3 to $10 was based on the square footage of the mobile home.

"However, we have seen no sign of the assessors as yet, but meantime, some operators have been authorized to collect the fee. Personally, I do not intend to break the law, but I want a so many feet long and so many feet wide... I want to know how much I owe and what I owe it for," said Mr. Wright.

DIFFICULT POSITION
"And when I receive such a notice I will pay the tax because that's what it is, whatever city council may call it, direct to the city hall, not to the operator," Mr. Wright added.

'Just Blood and Baby Clothes'

Tearful Polanski Tells of Love

Dear Ann Landers: My mother is 83 years old. I have never lived anywhere but under her roof. I am 65 today, a dried-up raisin of a woman, all my chances for marriage long gone, all my hopes for a career shattered.

There isn't one thing you can say to help me, but perhaps you can say something to others whose lives are at a turning point — women who don't know whether to move out of the house, take that job in another city, or marry that man who says, "I'm tired of waiting. It's now or never." My life is what I made it — and I made it a hell. I cannot leave the house without telling Mother where I am going and when I'll be back. I must account to her for every penny I spend. ("It was papa's money, you know, and he left it all to me!" She has said that to me 1,000 times in the past 20 years.) I have very few friends left.

Mother Keeps Talking

When they call, mother sits in and talks endlessly about things that happened 50 years ago to people we don't know.

When it comes to hindsight I have 20-20 vision. I know where I went wrong. I was severely neurotic or I would not have allowed my mother to dominate and suffocate me. I recall vividly every lost opportunity to set myself free. If youth knew what age could tell! Please Ann, print this. It might help somebody. — Life Wasted.

Human Agony Touching

Dear Maple: It's not possible to do this work and not be touched by the sadness and agony of humanity. But I resolved early to take the readers' problems seriously but not personally. There's an important distinction. People with trouble don't need someone to sit down and cry with them. They need a detached, objective observer to tell it like it is. And this I try to do.

Dear Friend: Age has told, and I hope youth will listen. Thanks for writing.

Dear Ann: A friendly ear is a tremendous comfort in time of trouble. Just having someone to talk to helps. I know. But how do you cope with all the problems that people heap on you? How do you keep from cracking up?

I saw you a few weeks ago when you addressed a national convention in Chicago and you look so buoyant and fresh — so untouched by it all. How do you keep your balance? — Maple Leaf.

Panty-Hose: That's All

TORONTO (CP) — In the three years or so that pantyhose have come on the market, many stylish women have happily abandoned stockings at 52 cents a pair and adopted the $2 sheer long johns.

Now retailers are saying panty sales are declining almost as rapidly as panty-hose sales are rising.

department store, says one-pieceers now account for between 50 and 60 per cent of his nylon and panty-hose volume.

The biggest action is in $2 versions with sheer, suntan-colored legs. His advice if you want the best is to buy the sheer-looking but still long-lasting no-run. It's true they can still be pulled into holes, but they don't ladder.

LOS ANGELES — Roman Polanski fought back tears Tuesday to tell newsmen of his brief but "truly happy" life with Sharon Tate — and of some of the things he has told police about circumstances surrounding her death.

There was no party at their home the night she and four other persons were slain.

She had no premonition of death. When he spoke to her by telephone from London "a few hours before the tragedy occurred," she talked of trivialities: his birthday party, feeding a homeless kitten.

Although Voltyck Frokowsky and Jay Sebring, two of the five victims, smoked marijuana, "Sharon didn't use drugs, she didn't touch alcohol, she didn't even smoke cigarettes."

He knew few of the people who were guests in his home while he was in Europe, but that one was a man thrown out of his house earlier for making a disturbance during a housewarming party.

He wouldn't name the man thrown out of his home, nor would another Polanski associate who is a closely guarded police informer on the case. The man was believed to be a suspect in the still mysterious multiple murder.

Polanski called the press conference, cancelled it then called it again. He finally appeared before newsmen, against the advice of his agents and attorney, because, he said:

"In this case it is not my reputation, it is the reputation of the one person who loved me — and whose name has been all over the papers."

"They (the writers) are curious about my relationship with Sharon within the last few months as well as within the last few years I spent with her."

He paused, swallowed, then continued: "They were the only time of true happiness in my life."

Polanski who is 5 foot 4, stood for the 15-minute talk.

He wore a double-breasted, blue-gray charcoal suit, his long hair lapping over its collar.

He spoke slowly, choosing his words carefully in a foreign language — he is French born, reared in Poland — and pausing often to brush tears back from his eyes.

Fifty newsmen gathered at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel for the first public statement made by the film director since the murder of his wife.

He sketched brief word pictures of his wife, Frokowsky and Sebring, who died with Abigail Folger and 18-year-old Steven Parent, a friend of the caretaker of the Tate-Polanski estate, early Aug. 9.

Of his wife, one of the stars of Valley of the Dolls, he said:

"All of you know how beautiful she was. She was one of the most beautiful women — if not the most beautiful woman — in the world. But few of you know how good she was. She was vulnerable. She couldn't refuse any friendship."

Of Frokowsky, a Polish emigre said by friends to have been a user of hard narcotics, he said:

"He was a man I knew from Poland for a very long time. A very kind human being, who wanted success — but who had little talent. He and Abigail Folger came to Los Angeles a year ago."

Of Sebring, the Hollywood hair stylist who once had been his wife's fiancé:

"Jay Sebring was our close friend. Sometimes he came without calling before. He'd just sit down and drink a beer."

Polanski said that there were six glasses in the home

Polanski's attorney had warned newsmen Polanski would not answer any

City Dump Will Close

COURTENAY — Courtenay city dump will be officially closed Sept. 2. Aldermen made the decision this week after ratifying an arrangement with Cumberland for dual use of Pigeon Lake dump owned by Cumberland.

***
The dump at Pigeon Lake will be open seven days a week and administered by a specially-appointed official. The agreement for use of the dump by Courtenay was also approved by Cumberland council.

Polishing costs will rise in Courtenay, council was told in a letter from G. C. Cunningham, assistant commissioner for E Division. Per capita costs for 1968 to 1969 amounted to $12,106.31 of which the municipality will pay $6,053.15 for each of the first five police members and $9,079.73 for the sixth and each additional member. This does not apply to Courtenay at present but an additional member is expected next year.

Costs for 1969 to 1970 will be $13,250 or $6,625 for each of the first five members and $9,937 for the sixth and each additional member. This is a cost rise of approximately $600.

Three tenders were received for purchase of a half-ton pick-up and a 6 1/2 cubic yard gravel truck with Nib Johnson Motors being the successful bidder. His tender was $2,270.51 for the pick-up and $7,492.90 for the larger truck. Mallin Ford and Three-Way Service submitted the other tenders.

Council agreed to purchase of a Champion grader from Cuprus Equipment, Vancouver, at a cost of $24,871.55

Suspension Follows Driving Incident

CAMPBELL RIVER — Randy Scott Malkewich, 22, was fined $250 and given a three-month licence suspension by Judge Roderick Hagg-Brown during a Campbell River Provincial Court hearing Monday.

Malkewich was charged with dangerous driving after a high speed chase last month through Campbell River along the Island Highway.

Also appearing in court were three Alberta youths: William Waffie, Peter Michael Sematuk, both 19, and Maurice Reginald Dewartz, 21, pleaded guilty with attempted theft Tuesday.

They were arrested by RCMP, court was told, after police received reports early Monday about persons acting suspiciously near oars at Freshwater Marina, Campbell River.

The three were given suspended sentences.

'Protest' Rocks Guards

By RICHARD JACKSON
Colonist Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — How far can student "protest" go?

Right into the very heart of the establishment? Into the Canadian Guards? Into the show-window ceremonial of the department of national defence, the changing of the guard on Parliament Hill?

Better believe it, for sad to say, it's happened.

The Guards, three platoons of red-jacketed, bearskin-hatted officers and men and a 60-piece regimental band, perform the colorful changing ceremony every summer morning at 10 o'clock before a gallery of tourists, mostly Americans, from the last week in June through the first week of September.

But with integration, unification and the "jolly green jumper" of a tri-service uniform, but most of all because of defence cut-backs, the Guards last winter came on hard times.

They have a date with the executioner, and while the regiment which has served in Cyprus awaits its extinction, manpower runs thin.

To fill the gaps in the ranks, students from Ottawa universities and Montreal colleges and high schools were enlisted.

For them it was a summer job, strictly.

They'd parade to Parliament Hill for the Guard changing, and for this they'd get $975 plus room and board. They'd work a schedule of eight days "on" and three and a half days "off."

Two of every three Guardsmen were students.

And then it happened. A hard-core few, less than a dozen, couldn't hack the discipline.

These were student activists from Montreal's high schools and the riot-ridden Sir George Williams University.

Bearskins—No Plumes

But it was rather a "chicken-type" protest.

They didn't wear the feathered plumes on the big black bearskins.

Now they're being formally "put on charge" and will get a real taste of discipline.

The "protest" began three days ago, going undetected until Monday.

But it sure has shaken defence headquarters and the once-proud Guards.

"We treated them like men, like soldiers," says Captain F. S. Gagnon who was in command while Col. Weinert was on special duty at Camp Petawawa, the Guards' home base.

"That's where we made our mistake," lamented the captain. "They aren't men, not even young men. They're immature kids. They joined us to do a reasonably well-paid job and we expected them to perform as honorably and well as the others who have been absolutely first class."

The absence of plumes on the bearskins not only was known but understood for the very reason that the clasp temporarily were out of unit stock.

So none of the officers counted unplumed bearskins.

Not, that is, until Monday morning, when as the Guards marched onto the Hill they were asked about the "protest."

'Mutiny' Confirmed

They were unbelieving. It couldn't have happened. They insisted. Never in the Guards. But they would check.

They did. And to their horror they confirmed it was mutiny.

Now everyone in the national capital's enormous military establishment is bravely trying to laugh it off, but it hurts.

Chuckling, one officer tried brushing the whole thing off with the remark it was little more than "a schoolboy storm in a teacup."

But it's not all that funny.

For the defence department was giving these students good solid military training which would make them eligible, when they get their university degrees, for commissioning as officers.

Now it's just another dream.

What bothers the national capital is that the "mutiny" could mean the end of this finest of summer festivals, the changing of the Guard which has been drawing an annual average 750,000 tourists to Parliament Hill ever since former Conservative defence minister George Peckford initially presented the half-hour daily military pageant back in 1957.

Sad to think that student "protest" may have put it in peril — and that next summer Parliament Hill won't be hearing 90 of the nation's finest bandmen sounding those slow and gutsy British army marches, Thin Red Line, Standard of Saint George, Voice of the Guns and other great "tunes of glory."

Boards Yacht with Pretty Brunette

Trudeau Cruising Mediterranean

MENTON, France (UPI) — Canadian Prime Minister Trudeau slipped unobtrusively into France Tuesday morning, flew to the glamorous Riviera, and immediately boarded a yacht in the company of an unidentified pretty brunette for a Mediterranean cruise.

With the help of French security officials, Trudeau eluded newsmen and press photographers who tried to keep up with his whirlwind passage from Paris to Nice and finally to this tiny port near the French-Italian border.

Police but firm security agents even prevented the deputy mayor of Menton from boarding the yacht Adanac when he tried to present the vacationing Canadian leader a traditional Riviera welcoming gift of flowers and brandy-soaked fruit.

Trudeau later got off the 88-foot, 100-ton yacht barefoot and dressed as a sailor, to speak to the deputy mayor, explaining that he was travelling unofficially and neither wanted nor expected any welcoming ceremony.

He told the deputy mayor he would like to visit Menton again, especially the town hall decorated by Jean Cocteau.

The yacht, which was flying a Panamanian flag, is registered in the name of Mrs. Lucienne Wilson, a wealthy 69-year-old Canadian woman who lives in nearby Monte Carlo. When telephoned, Mrs. Wilson refused to answer any questions, saying "I don't have to make any statements."

The boat started sailing to the east, presumably to Italy after noon local time.

PRAGUE (AP) — Without waiting for demonstrations, riot troops tear gassed and clubbed downtown crowds here Tuesday night on the anniversary eve of the Soviet-led invasion of Czechoslovakia.

Hours earlier, Communist party chief Gustav Husak endorsed the Aug. 20-21, 1968, invasion and warned against anniversary agitation.

Underground groups have called for a "national day of shame" to mark the anniversary of the invasion that shattered the liberal movement introduced and nurtured by former party chief Alexander Dubcek.

More than a dozen armored personnel carriers and water cannon rolled into Wenceslas

Grounds Lacking In Attack

Square as evening rush-hour crowds lined the sidewalks staring sullenly at the national Museum and the statue of St. Wenceslas; symbols of protest in the last year against Soviet occupation.

After warning the crowd several times to go home, riot police attacked with truncheons. During twilight and after dark they fired three barrages of tear-gas canisters into the square.

Clouds of tear gas sent hundreds of Czechoslovaks and tourists racing in near panic away from the square.

Police and the Czechoslovak army sent guard units to Prague's government buildings, radio stations and newspaper offices.

Husak said earlier in the day in a televised speech to party workers in Prague that "there will be no Wild West in our country."

"They tried to have one for a year and a half and now, once and for all, they must take into account that we will not permit anyone to disrupt the state."

But he admitted that "sabotage-character actions in industry, transport and supply" are taking place.

The incident in Wenceslas Square began in early afternoon when police, reinforced for the anniversary period, cleared a smaller crowd from St. Wenceslas Statue, symbol of anti-Soviet resistance.

Some people in the crowd had been placing flowers at the statue's base. After he took over from Dubcek last April, Husak banned the practice of crowds gathering at the statue.

Wrong Man Serves Five-Day Jail Term

TORONTO (CP) — A Windsor man who cannot drive and has never owned a car spent five days in Don Jail on a charge of non-payment of a parking ticket.

He was jailed because his name was John Bennett, the same name as a person wanted since 1968 for not paying the parking ticket.

Police Chief James Mackey admitted the mistake Tuesday.

"It appears that the police erred and jailed the wrong man," he said.

John Bennett of Windsor was arrested and charged with being a drunk July 31 when he arrived at Toronto by train.

After receiving a suspended sentence police sent him to Don Jail, claiming they had a warrant from 1968 ordering him to jail for five days for failing to pay a traffic fine.

"The Roman Catholic-dominated Irish Republic to the south has favored an end to the 1920 partition that separated it from the Protestant North under British rule. Chichester-Clark blamed much of the trouble of the last week on agitation for an end to partition.

Wilson said the civil rights reforms demanded by the Roman Catholic minority in Ulster in jobs, housing and voting rights will be speeded up.

Equality promised

All citizens of Northern Ireland, he said, "irrespective of their political or religious views will have the same rights of freedom against discrimination as all other citizens of the United Kingdom."

Wilson also announced: "We have reached agreement on the main principles and on a declaration which will govern the relations between the two governments and our handling of the problem in the coming months."

Personally, he is working no harder in this than in any other campaign, but he says there are more volunteers and offers of help than last time. "I've tried to avoid a machine or organization," Mr. Bruch says.

Giant-Killing Job Faces Two in Esquimalt

By CLEMENT CHAPPLER

Two of the three men hoping to take Esquimalt constituency in the Aug. 27 election will have to be giant killers to succeed.

The two would-be giant-killers are NDPer Jim Gorst, who a year and a half ago was Esquimalt Liberal Association president, and Liberal Fred Phillips, a Langford resident of one and a half years, manager of the CFB Esquimalt Savings Credit Union.

The third man, Social Credit Herbert Bruch, is the giant. Mr. Bruch is fighting his sixth election in Esquimalt and according to the long-term figures, his popularity is increasing.

Mr. Bruch's lowest point in popularity came in 1960 when he won only 40 per cent of the votes, yet still beat the closest man to him (CCFer Geoff Mitchell) by a comfortable 1,046 votes.

In 1963 he increased his percentage to 48 and in 1966 he walked away with 53 per cent.

One of Mr. Bruch's recurring election planks is that, if elected, he will be a full-time member of the B.C. Legislature. Except for one six-month period in the early 1950s, he has had no job outside that provided by his legislative duties, he says.

He has, however, been national president of the Social Credit party for a number of years, and spends much of his time doing work for the Social Credit "team" all over B.C.

Although he speaks in terms of the province when he says

McGeer Sees Rusted Sacred Ship Sinking

By CLEMENT CHAPPEL

After a drawn-out discussion at noon in Centennial Square with a crew of about 25 hippie types, and a rain-out appearance at Colwood shopping plaza, Dr. McGeer drew more than 300 people "away from the stuffy old halls" of the past and out to a corn roast at Elk Lake, where all the local Liberal candidates gathered.

The crowd failed to demolish the 5,000 ears of corn laid on for the occasion, but it ate up Dr. McGeer's prediction that the Liberal party would form the next government of B.C.

The Liberal leader in a post-roast speech said that "nowhere more than in southern Vancouver Island" was it evident that the Social Credit government had "failed to come up with the candidates" to win the election.

He said he wanted to bring a "new style of politics" to the province and to get away from the "stuffy old halls" that had characterized political meetings in the past in B.C.

Asking support for the "commonsense, middle-of-the-road young men" who are candidates in the four Greater Victoria ridings, Dr. McGeer said the Sacred "government ship is springing leaks all over the province — especially in the Interior and in the north of B.C."

"This ship is going down, and going down quickly," he said.

"We torpedoed it," came a shout from the crowd.

"No, it's just rusted," Dr. McGeer said.

Dr. McGeer said the government had not relied on its men from Greater Victoria for achievement. "Surely this must have been obvious" to the people, he said.

"I'm proud of these (local) Liberal candidates, and I'll stack them up against candidates of any other party and of any other area of British Columbia."

Dr. McGeer added that even if they were not members of the Liberal Party, "I would still appeal to the people to support them as individuals on their own."

"They're that good," he said.

He said the Oak Bay seat, held in the last legislature by Liberal Allan Cox, was absolutely safe.

Dr. McGeer said the campaign in the ridings of Esquimalt, Victoria and Saanich-Islands, where candidates Fred Phillips, Ian Stewart and Mel Goodier, and L. G. F. Lindholm are running, "has not yet reached its peak."

But the campaign has "started to catch fire," he said. "Yes, the people here can see it... it's no fairy tale... the government is going down..."

Dr. McGeer said there were problems of overcrowding at schools here, a university that was "not finished," highways problems and pollution — "all because of the weakness of your local representation."

The Liberal Party, he said, wanted "to form a government of no special interest — no commitment to big business, no commitment to labor — only a commitment to the people."

Dr. McGeer said the people of B.C. "have got to lick the

"We've got to abolish fear," he said, and "we've got to have the courage to vote for change."

Dr. McGeer earlier in the day met almost no response when his campaign bus stopped at Colwood shopping plaza. A light rain kept most of what people there were inside their parked cars when the Liberal leader spoke through a microphone from the back of a pickup truck.

The Liberal leader spent a group of hippie types in Centennial Square about 12:30 p.m. after he was interrupted by their heckling singing close by.

A small group, mostly Liberal supporters, grew into a gathering of about 100 people after one of the hippies asked Dr. McGeer, "What about the barrier between youth and older people?"

The youth said politicians were "always making promises" and never keeping them, and all politicians were the same.

"If that's your attitude, then you should be in politics yourself, showing us how it's done," Dr. McGeer argued.

When Dr. McGeer invited the youth to ask others standing away to enter the conversation, a young woman said, "I think old people should come to them."

A youth said he wanted the freedom to do what he liked, as long as he didn't hurt anyone else.

"You can't do that any more — that ended 100 years ago," an older man interjected.

When a youth insisted that young and older generations could not communicate, Saanich-Islands candidate Louis Lindholm said: "I don't believe it." He asked them, "Would you like to canvass for me in Saanich?"

Some of the young people said they would like to canvass for him, and a party worker arranged to pick them up for the work.

Ensign 'Best Flag' For B.C.

B.C. Liberal leader Pat McGeer said in Victoria Tuesday he would like to see the Red Ensign replace B.C.'s "ham-and-eggs" provincial flag.

Approached by Red Ensign campaigner George Burnham at the Liberal corn roast Tuesday at Elk Lake, Dr. McGeer sympathized with Mr. Burnham and said: "I've never liked our provincial flag... and I think we should make the Red Ensign our provincial flag."

Mr. Burnham, a First World War veteran, has made it a personal project to have the act instituting Canada's Maple Leaf flag repealed on the grounds that it is ultra vires of the British North America Act.

Dipping into an ice-cream cup, Dr. McGeer told Mr. Burnham, "There's nothing you and I can do about it," and then said "I think we should make it our provincial flag."

"I don't think we should have the ham-and-eggs flag we have now," Dr. McGeer said.

The Red Ensign, he said, meant much more to British Columbians than the provincial flag. Dr. McGeer said the flag was presented to B.C. when Premier Bennett "just flew to England, came back and unfurled the thing."

He said the Oak Bay seat, held in the last legislature by Liberal Allan Cox, was absolutely safe.

Dr. McGeer said the campaign in the ridings of Esquimalt, Victoria and Saanich-Islands, where candidates Fred Phillips, Ian Stewart and Mel Goodier, and L. G. F. Lindholm are running, "has not yet reached its peak."

Esquimalt Warms Up

By NANCY BROWN

The three-way campaign in Esquimalt riding heated up Tuesday night when an audience of 150 turned out at Metehosin for an all-candidate meeting.

A farm newspaper and a question about name-calling were the sparks for a fiery exchange that featured NDP candidate Jim Gorst and Metehosin residents J. J. Zubick and Anna Rams.

Mr. Zubick asked for candidate's opinions about "the name-calling sessions being indulged in by Premier Bennett," especially references to Liberal and NDP provincial leaders as "enemies of democracy" and to the NDP members as "Godless Socialists."

"CONVICTED" According to Liberal Fred Phillips, the premier "stands convicted out of his own mouth."

According to Social Credit incumbent Herbert Bruch the question should be addressed to the premier—because he knew nothing about it.

Mr. Gorst said the statements portrayed a panicky premier, by which time Mrs. Rams had risen to her feet with a muttered: "I've had it up to here."

"What," she demanded, "do you think of Mr. Berger who said Mr. Bennett is an old de-crapit bumbling man who is terrified?"

"BIGGER NAMES" "If we're going to have name-calling, I am going to call bigger names than anyone has ever heard."

Turning on Mr. Gorst, she produced a Manitoba farm paper, which she said contained a statement by the new Manitoba NDP premier suggesting that farmers could force up the price of beef.

Mr. Gorst, who said he had been confronted earlier this week by Mrs. Rams, produced his own copy of the paper, to the delight of the audience.

He said the premier's endorsement of the Manitoba Farmers' Union had no connection with the story about the possibility of farmers gaining a higher price for their products.

The debate appeared to end in a draw, and about an even score for the hecklers.

Earlier, Mr. Bruch had said the provincial government is looking to solve the pollution and sewage problem without putting homeowners to the expense of building trunk and sewer lines.

He said the government was investigating the installation of units which would incinerate all household wastes, with the unit to cost about $1,000 plus monthly operating costs of $5 or $6.

He refused to endorse a recent call by the Teachers' Federation for candidates to use a "bite out of the apple" sign if they endorsed the federation program for education.

"I'm not going to take a bite out of that apple," he said. "I've once offered an apple like that."

NO CONNECTION In answer to another question, he said Mr. Bennett had not called an early election to precede any hearing of the Commonwealth Trust and Diversified Income cases.

Mr. Gorst outlined the NDP program, which he said featured public automobile insurance at lower costs, and gradual easing of the hospital, education and sewage costs from the homeowners' shoulders.

Programs would be paid for, he said, by increase and enforcement of Crown royalties on such natural resources as coal and timber.

'COMMONSENSE' He said there would be a takeover of B.C. Telephone which over the last 15 years had sent $30,000,000 out of Canada.

Liberal candidate Fred Phillips said he wanted to bring some commonsense into government, and wanted to see education changes to help both the top and below-average student.

Commission would widen its scope and employ a permanent staff "to go out to the people, see what's really happening, and investigate complaints."

He added: "They won't find any shortage of work if they do."

Mr. Sands said the submissions "have given us a good deal to think about, although I'm not sure what we can do in a practical way."

"Well, that's all right," said Mrs. Talbot. "As long as somebody is thinking, maybe something will happen."

City Senior Staff Awarded Raises

By PAT MURPHY

Senior staff members at City Hall were awarded a 12-per-cent raise in salary at a closed meeting Aug. 7, it was learned Tuesday.

The closed meeting of city council was held following an open meeting during which aldermen approved the $2,600,000 swimming pool and aquatic project for the northwest corner of Central Park.

Senior staff includes the city manager, the assistant city manager and heads of departments.

NO SECRECY City officials said Tuesday that there was never any secrecy about the pay raise, although the news was never made public.

Although the increase was general, City Manager Dennis Young did not get the full 12 per cent. His salary was rounded off at $25,000 a year.

Department heads' salaries, under the new schedule, will range from just below $20,000, for those with long seniority, down to about $15,000.

It was pointed out Tuesday that senior staff had not had an increase for 21 months, although the remainder of the city workers had received two increases in that time totalling approximately 12 per cent.

It was also pointed out the increase was made after a four-month survey during which salary schedules from all over the province were studied. Victoria's rates, it was found, were slightly below those for cities of comparable size.

SALARY REVIEW

At least one alderman at the Aug. 7 meeting protested the increase. He said that 12 per cent was too big a bite for the taxpayers and that staff should be given 6 per cent this year and 6 next. He was voted down by other members of city council.

City staffers were reported Tuesday to be unhappy that city salaries had not come under review annually as had those of other municipalities and people holding similar posts in the provincial government.

It is quite likely that an annual review will be instituted in future years.

At the present time all branches of City Hall staff have settled, with the exception of the police department. In that case an arbitration board award is awaited.

Matches Cause Of Fire?

Three boys aged 10, 11 and 12 have told Saanich police they were playing with matches around the sawdust bins at Van Isle Moulding and Millwork Mill before it burned down Saturday night.

The boys were brought forward by their parents after the father of one recognized the description of his son's bicycle that appeared in Tuesday morning's Colonist. He thought he also recognized the descriptions of the other two boys' bikes, and got in touch with their parents.

BOYS QUESTIONED

They brought the boys to the police station, where they were questioned by the youth detail. "The parents were most cooperative, though naturally they were terribly upset," said Saanich Inspector Harry Adams.

Insp. Adams said that when the boys were questioned they admitted playing with matches in the sawdust bin area, but thought any smouldering had been put out before they left.

OUTCOME IN DOUBT

"We don't yet know what the outcome of this is going to be. The boys are all of tender years," he said.

Fire department officials estimated destruction of the mill at $500,000. It employed 40 men. The loss was partially covered by insurance.

Low-Rental Project Five Months Ahead of Schedule

About 68 units will be completed by the end of October in the low-rental housing project in the Rose-Blanshard urban renewal area, City Hall officials said Tuesday.

Co-ordinator for the project, William Hooton, said contractor George Wheaton was five months ahead of schedule and was putting up buildings at a terrific rate.

By October, he added, two apartment buildings would be completed in the south end of the site.

Mr. Hooton said that although the Wheaton Construction Company only started on the $2,400,000 contract in April, it was likely that all 184 units would be completed by the end of the year.

The problem now, said Mr. Hooton, was whether to allow occupancy as the units were completed or to hold off until an extensive landscaping program was completed over the whole tract south of Hillside.

The pressure for housing was great.

The co-ordinator said the city had already received 135 applications and more had been received by the federal and provincial governments, partners with the city in the enterprise.

One thing was certain, Mr. Hooton said, and that was that there would not be nearly enough space for old people.

There were only 35 single-bedroom units in the whole plan, and they would not be

Clinic Short

Tuesday's Red Cross blood donor clinic collected only 87 of a hoped-for 150 pints of blood.

Monday's clinic came closer to the 150-pint objective. But, a Red Cross official said that without the support of members of Victoria's Real Estate Board, "we'd never have come near yesterday's total of 132 donors."

A clinic will be held from 1:30 to 4 p.m. today in the Canadian Forces Officers' (Candidale School, HMC Dockyard.

'Discrimination in Worst Sense'

Rights Hearing Told Many Excluded from Laws

By ALAN ANDERSON

On Monday, John Sherlock, director of B.C.'s Human Rights Act, was saying he didn't expect much to come out of Tuesday morning's public hearings of the human rights commission at the Law Courts in Victoria.

"We deplore the fact that there's this degree of public apathy," he said.

On Tuesday, commission chairman W. H. Sands, deputy minister of labor, was saying he was "very, very pleased" about the submissions made to the commission.

And vice-chairman Mrs. Ben Eaton was saying it made her "proud to be a woman" to hear what two other women had said.

The two other women were Mrs. Dorothy Livingston, a social worker concerned with Indian affairs, and Mrs. Susan Talbot, an advocate for welfare recipients.

"I wonder how much you people really know about poverty and the problems of the poor," said Mrs. Livingston.

"The people I have worked with are not helped by any existing legislation, and I can't imagine any sweeping human rights legislation that could possibly help them, unless it is vastly different from anything I have heard spoken of yet."

Mrs. Livingston described the people she said were being excluded from modern society.

"Many of them have been on welfare spasmodically," she said. "They have gumption enough to go out and get jobs."

"But they are ill-educated, and the jobs they get are mostly agricultural. They spend at least nine hours in the fields, and another hour or more travelling to work."

"The fields have no washrooms, not even any water, and they spend the whole day there. Many are women, many more are juveniles."

"Not even the Minimum Wage Act applies to these people. They are excluded from the benefits of the law — and then you talk of human rights."

"That is why I wonder just how much you people really know about poverty and the problems of the poor," she said.

Mrs. Talbot, a member of the Greater Victoria Women's Action Committee, said discrimination in the worst sense was constantly being practised against recipients of welfare.

"They are not treated as human beings. They are not really considered human beings," she said. "There is a great deal of abuse — mental and emotional abuse — of these people by administrators of welfare."

She said she was herself a foster parent of three children and knew how hard it was to make the foster-parent grants go around. "But welfare recipients get far less, and they get all this psychological abuse on top of their other difficulties," she said.

Larry Ryan, chairman of the human rights council of the Victoria United Nations Association said Social Credit advertisements about basic rights were misleading.

He said he hoped the
